"Nope. According to the NAB chairman, Apple will be adding an HD FM tuner to an upcoming iPod Nano."

"HD's Killer App Goes Poof!"

"You've probably heard that Apple's new iPod Nano will have an FM tuner with iTunes tagging built in. Lost in radio's coverage of the announcement was its impact on HD Radio... Apple's deal with iBiquity was just a test. They wanted a system that could sell more downloads and trump Rhapsody, and HD was the perfect guinea pig. They already had tagging on the entire iPod line. With the kinks worked out, now all they had to do was add an FM tuner to the iPod. Which they did with the new Nano... Make no mistake. This move was not designed to help radio. It was designed to give iTunes a revenue boost... And HD? Apple knows how many downloads HD generated for iTunes. Maybe that's why they didn't bother adding an HD tuner to any of the new iPods."

Believe me, I heard it all, and I'm still here - LOL! This group makes little difference in the end. With the thousands of hits on my blog, and two years of posting 6,000 backlinks, the hard work is now done. All I have to do now is sit back and enjoy the traffic to my blog that trumps most everything that Struble claims, and bogus announcements by iBiquity and the fraudulant HD Radio Alliance.

Noam Chomsky Compares Right-Wing Media To “Nazis”

Add Noam Chomsky http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1232 to the growing list of people using the Nazi analogy lately. Speaking to the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco, he alluded to right-wing media as “substantive content – crazy content, but it does give answers,” and warned that if Americans weren’t properly educated about what was really happening to them, they could be in for a repeat of the Nazi takeover of Germany in the 1930s.

Unfortunately for birdbrain Communist Chomsky it was the "Progressive" Socialists supported by the his Russian Communists Komrads that brought the Socialist NAZI Party into power. That's the facts!

I bought a TASK FORCE LED Item #225285 Model # FT-NS-2C 3W Flashlight about a week ago at the Lowe's store.That dude is BRIGHT! It says on the package you are not suppose to look into the light.Of course, I did.

An ad I saw in my snail mail November 2009 Popular Science about the Laserglow Aries series lasers can project a visible beam (I am reading from the ad in my magazine) in the night sky for miles, signal to the horizon, light matches, pop balloons and even start campfires! Perfect for the science, technology or outdoors fanatic that has everything.Available with 20-250 mW of power, starting at just $199.Also available: violet, blue, yellow and green laser pointers.

"New Zune To Include HD Radio"

"Bob Struble, President/CEO of iBiquity Digital Corporation, commented, We are very excited about the launch of HD Radio technology on Microsoft’s Zune HD. We are planning with the HD Radio Alliance to promote Zune HD to consumers."

http://www.fmqb.com/Article.asp?id=1342290

MS only included HD Radio for the free publicity for its failed Zune lines.

"DEAD AIR: Radio’s Great Leap Forward stalling in the Valley" December 5, 2007

"Nearly two years after the Valley’s four Clear Channel stations went HD, several high-end car manufacturers have promised to offer HD radios as an option on new models. But while Ford announced in September that it offers the radios as dealer-installed upgrades — as have Mini, Volvo, Jaguar and BMW — local Ford and Lincoln dealers had not heard of HD and said they don’t offer the option."

"Are Ford and HD Radio in Sync?"

"The radio industry will, of course, promote Ford for free in exchange for this development as part of the presumably soon-to-expire pledge of airtime to the HD radio effort."

http://www.hear2.com/2007/09/are-ford-and-hd.html

Ford used the HD Alliance, too, but didn't bother to install HD Radio, because it is too costly and doesn't work - LOL!

Community Service Begins with the Truth
Today, my wife called me about the helicopters and Air Force One flying over our house. Mr. Obama had just left New Orleans a few hours earlier, after giving a speech. As far as I am concerned, the only speech that needs to be given to New Orleans, is to honestly tell them they should not live there, and how can we help them permanently leave?

Community Service is already performed when most workers practically donate their labors to the community, and only retain 20 percent of what they they have accomplished? Community service is nodding your head that you will pay on a mortgage for thirty years, for house really built in thirty days or thirty weeks? Community service is paying energy utility bills the size of house mortgages, or insurance payments the size of mortgages, or going to school and paying for that education for almost a decade?

Community Service begins with telling the truth. I can tell you what you want to hear, but that is not the only, or best fork in the road. Earlier in the week, a trucker had called the Rush Limbaugh show and said that Rush was successful because he told them what the audience wanted to hear. He then went on to say how bad the economy was with trucks sitting in truck stops and not moving freight.

Rush Limbaugh is talented enough to be a political commentator without resorting to the nuances of deception that can waste people's time, and I enjoy his show because he does not practice those kinds of actions to produce his show. The football commentator McMadden never had to do that in thirty years? If he does begin to do that, I may not understand why, and I may not understand how to continue to justify supporting him. Loyalty is not a tool to invent fools, it is the description of those who follow those with the principals and ideals that are what define America as the shining star, the light on the hill, or a point of light? That's my draft idea?

If you want an example of a politically correct environment, if you want to see how government will control your life, just look at the life of a truck driver? Truck drivers are not sitting in truck stops only because they are not moving freight, but because of government rules that ignore scientific reports that say 72 hour rest breaks are not necessary, but Democrats in charge of changing those rules, just ignore the issue?

Well, that is the problem today as well, with the little child, told to give a speech asking why people hate President Obama? Just because you do not agree with someone, does not mean that they hate them. If I gave a waiter an order at a restaurant, and he ignored me, and came back with lobster instead of the steak that I ordered, would I be mad about being ignored? People are mad at President Obama, because he is ignoring them, and apparently has chosen to ignore the simple fact that America has checks and balances?

The reason why Mr. Obama is mad, is because he chooses to ignore those checks and balances, and has decided to hallucinate in his imaginary mind, that there is something wrong with people that do not agree with him? That is the definition of denial, that is the definition of subversion, deception, ignorance, and many more things? Mr. President, voters do not make the Presidency, the oath of office makes the Presidency.

Anyone can fill ballot boxes with voting ballets, it is the oath of office, when you serve as an executive representing the President of the United States, that makes you special, and your faithful ability to honor, abide, protect, cherish, advance, support, and to be an ambassador to the world, not to fundamentally change America, but to fundamentally support why freedom is the special part of America that we hold out to all countries to emulate and embrace.

These thoughts ran through my mind, as I heard the echo of President Bush, Sr., advocating for the return of civility to the political conversations today. Mr. President Obama, I will not civilly endorse your potential ignorance of the Constitution of the United States, or the looting of America that has been clearly the objective of the political winds represented by the voting public, who trust public officials to represent them, not to remake America, but to preserve the checks and balances, to preserve the fundamental freedoms, liberties and advance the ideals that make America strong.

I can think of the excessive numbers of Czars, I can think of the Russian advisors possibly disguised as weapons inspectors (in my opinion they could care less how many warheads we have) whose advise would be invaluable in a civil war, I can think of the health care plans that are clearly being financed so that if there is indeed a fundamental change in Congress to throw out those who created the new entitlements, by the end of those terms of newly elected members who replaced them, new entitlement programs will be so expensive, the Republic will not survive without the tripling of current tax rates, and the parties will switch chairs again? Who can promote Democracy if Democracy is simply looting disguised as musical chairs?

This is not a conclusive conversation, I am just pointing out the obvious things? Emotions are what defines the degree of outrage expressed by an event, policy, or even idea, and that is what makes America special, Mr. President. Civility requires that we express that outrage when it clearly represents that we sense the destruction of the Republic, the destruction of our freedoms, the destruction of our liberties, the destruction of our economy, and the destruction of the ability to worship our God in pride, and not as though He was someone, or something to be ashamed of, that we must lash our tongues in silence.

So the president is fired up? I don't see the President fired up about America, I don't see the President fired up about preserving the fundamental principals of our government, I don't see the President fired up about changing the way citizens around the world cherish, adore, or promote fundamental freedoms that protect citizens as children, that do so without treating them like children? Do you see the President fired up about promoting to the citizens around the world, and asking the question, are they trusting their leaders as brothers, or as jailers ready to throw them in the grave when ever it suits them?

President Obama has a science advisor that wants to paint all roofs white? I wonder who has a relationship with paint companies, or unions? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that scientists for the EPA are fired, or inspector generals who are doing their jobs? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that we need to define foreign terrorists as anything other than people that deserve hanging? Or is civility now defined as not being American, not fighting for your Constitutional rights, such as reminding the government that seizure of property is to control it, not necessarily occupy it?

If we can not see a President, fired up enough about the truth of the matter, to tell the people of New Orleans, to rebuild there, is to rebuild a death trap, just who or what is being fired up? In the open water, are injured fish fired up? Sharks never tire, the silent guardians of the ocean never tire, who are always there, and I do not see a President fired up, I see him beginning to panic, due to his imaginary injuries?

So did Captain Kirk, did he inspire by creating drama, or did he inspire by leadership, by his faith in his ship, by his faith in his engineers, so that when he said, give me all you got Scotty, he got 10 percent more? Faith is in that which is not seen? When America was given the United States Constitution, it got ten percent more.

The United States Constitution does not depend on the observations of failure, it does not depend upon the liberty of greed, which defines slavery, it provides the foundation of the road that mankind must ride, with the heavy machinery that must carry the abundant gifts of God granted to his children, defined as the fruit of liberty?

Being that this is the most powerful keyboard in the world, able to distinguish the truth from reality, emotion, from sanity, and hate from ignorance, in the space of one article, in the space of one moment in time, and yet last forever, so that you may be defined as a communicator, and not a director, you have to ask yourself one question......

Do you feel lucky?

My Ionic Breeze thangy that I bought for five dollars at the Goodwill store, it started making a scratching noise, like that mouse trying to get out of that plastic Mouse Cube mouse trap I bought at the Wal Mart Gestapo store.I cleaned the Ionic Breeze three metal bars thingy and I used my electric blower and I blew the dust out of the Ionic Breeze.Then I put the three bars thingy back in and I turned it on.It started making that scratching noise again and I saw thin looking flames arching around in there between the wires and the bars.I turned the damn thing off and I unplugged it.That gadget is Dangerous!

People are mad at President Obama, because he is ignoring them, and apparently has chosen to ignore the simple fact that America has checks and balances?

The reason why Mr. Obama is mad, is because he chooses to ignore those checks and balances, and has decided to hallucinate in his imaginary mind, that there is something wrong with people that do not agree with him? That is the definition of denial, that is the definition of subversion, deception, ignorance, and many more things? Mr. President, voters do not make the Presidency, the oath of office makes the Presidency.

Anyone can fill ballot boxes with voting ballets, it is the oath of office, when you serve as an executive representing the President of the United States, that makes you special, and your faithful ability to honor, abide, protect, cherish, advance, support, and to be an ambassador to the world, not to fundamentally change America, but to fundamentally support why freedom is the special part of America that we hold out to all countries to emulate and embrace.

These thoughts ran through my mind, as I heard the echo of President Bush, Sr., advocating for the return of civility to the political conversations today. Mr. President Obama, I will not civilly endorse your potential ignorance of the Constitution of the United States, or the looting of America that has been clearly the objective of the political winds represented by the voting public, who trust public officials to represent them, not to remake America, but to preserve the checks and balances, to preserve the fundamental freedoms, liberties and advance the ideals that make America strong.

I can think of the excessive numbers of Czars, I can think of the Russian advisors possibly disguised as weapons inspectors (in my opinion they could care less how many warheads we have) whose advise would be invaluable in a civil war, I can think of the health care plans that are clearly being financed so that if there is indeed a fundamental change in Congress to throw out those who created the new entitlements, by the end of those terms of newly elected members who replaced them, new entitlement programs will be so expensive, the Republic will not survive without the tripling of current tax rates, and the parties will switch chairs again? Who can promote Democracy if Democracy is simply looting disguised as musical chairs?

This is not a conclusive conversation, I am just pointing out the obvious things? Emotions are what define the degree of outrage expressed by an event, policy, or even idea, and that is what makes America special, Mr. President. Civility requires that we express that outrage when it clearly represents that we sense the destruction of the Republic, the destruction of our freedoms, the destruction of our liberties, the destruction of our economy, and the destruction of the ability to worship our God in pride, and not as though He was someone, or something to be ashamed of, that we must lash our tongues in silence.

So the president is fired up? I don't see the President fired up about America, I don't see the President fired up about preserving the fundamental principals of our government, I don't see the President fired up about changing the way citizens around the world cherish, adore, or promote fundamental freedoms that protect citizens as children, that do so without treating them like children? Do you see the President fired up about promoting to the citizens around the world, and asking the question, are they trusting their leaders as brothers, or as jailers ready to throw them in the grave when ever it suits them?

President Obama has a science advisor that wants to paint all roofs white? I wonder who has a relationship with paint companies, or unions? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that scientists for the EPA are fired, or inspector generals who are doing their jobs? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that we need to define foreign terrorists as anything other than people that deserve hanging? Or is civility now defined as not being American, not fighting for your Constitutional rights, such as reminding the government that seizure of property is to control it, not necessarily occupy it?

If we can not see a President, fired up enough about the truth of the matter, to tell the people of New Orleans, to rebuild there, is to rebuild a death trap, just who or what is being fired up? In the open water, are injured fish fired up? Sharks never tire, the silent guardians of the ocean never tire, who are always there, and I do not see a President fired up, I see him beginning to panic, due to his imaginary injuries, and the sharks of failure will sense that soon and will eat his career?

So did Captain Kirk, did he inspire by creating drama, or did he inspire by leadership, by his faith in his ship, by his faith in his engineers, so that when he said, give me all you got Scotty, he got 10 percent more? Faith is in that which is not seen? When America was given the United States Constitution, it got ten percent more.

The United States Constitution does not depend on the observations of failure, it does not depend upon the liberty of greed, which defines slavery, it provides the foundation of the road that mankind must ride, with the heavy machinery that must carry the abundant gifts of God granted to his children, defined as the fruit of liberty?

Being that this is the most powerful keyboard in the world, able to distinguish the truth from reality, emotion, from sanity, and hate from ignorance, in the space of one article, in the space of one moment in time, and yet last forever, so that you may be defined as a communicator, and not a director, you have to ask yourself one question......

Do you feel lucky?

Most have agreed to forgo advertising in order to highlight the HD as an alternative, another choice.

Some have leased time to ethnic groups for cash, some have leased time to infomercials, some to religious outlets.....for cash.

As someone who used to work in Classical radio, you realize that those formats are dropping like flies.

Classical could find a nice home on HD-2 channels....and some NPR outlets are doing news/talk on their HD1....and doing classical on their HD2.

The formats available on HD2 (and 3) are going to be niche programming.
Enough listeners to sustain it, but not enough to warrant an $70 million dollar signal.

One of the biggest problems classical formats have had is balancing the listeners who like choral & opera....with those who don't!

This one of the great uses of secondary streams. HD2 can be all choral & opera.

COuntry formats that feature 90's and todays music...can put 60's/70's on the decondary HD2 channel.

LOL, the first time I checked the statistics on one if my web sites I was thrilled to see like 300,000 hits until I realized that bots accounted for at least 250,000 of those hits.

A more accurate way of judging the popularity of your site is to enter the relevant key words (in this case "HD Radio" and see where you end up in the rankings. If you're not in the top 3 of non-sponsored results then your site is not reaching many visitors. Personally, I always try for #1, using no more than three keywords, since then my site will show up when someone uses the "I'm Feeling Lucky" button on Google.

I'm surprised he only has 25,000 "visitors." That indicates that his site, whatever it is, is not linked to by many other sites.

In any case, please stop responding to him. It's easy to kill-file an individual user, but a pain to filter individual threads. It's clear that he knows very little about HD technology.

Ru$h ...
The one who is financed with $400m to make america fail
The one who believes smoking is the way to finance the government the one who says high fructose corn syrup is health Says we should stop the catholics from being in government Visits third world countries known for their sex trade packing viagra dropped out of collage with poor grades and known for partying has problems managing his addiction to opiates Does nothing to help people truly in need except for poor corporate elitist who finance him Classifies people based on race and/or religion
Seems to hate most everybody at some point and time
Offers nothing constructive other then leading the moronic flock

The voice of the GOP hypocritical do-nothing party of NO!

Enjoy your "Ru$h"

SCA is not only not broadcasting, it is a subscription service and reception of SCA by unauthorized users is technically illegal.

With IBOC it is not the same. Anyone who buys an IBOC receiver is de facto authorized to receive any signal broadcast by any IBOC equipped station. It is, therefor, for the time being, a free radio service that anyone can listen to, and so covered by FCC rules dealing with content. I'm not sure how that would work for the ability of the stations to sell time to freelancers (e.g. pirates). Someone would have to be responsible for paying royalties, etc., as well.

Satellite is a different case. It's like SCA in some ways. In particular, it is a subscription service that is not available to everyone for free, and is therefor restricted access. This is why normal FCC content rules do not apply.

You certainly seem worrired about all of those cut-and-pastes - perhaps, the truth is coming out about this HD Radio scam. There needs to be a Federal Investigation into the iBiquity/FCC relationship. I've already gotten 10 hits from the Department of Justice and the FCC, each.

With your HD Radio cheerleading obsession, you have to work for either iBiquity, the HD Radio Alliance, or the NAB. The truth always has a funny way of finding the light of day. Someday, there will be an investigation into the HD Radio scam - the iBiquity/FCC relation is being exposed, worldwide, with hdradiofarce.blogspot.com and stopiboc.com.

"Struble: HD Addresses The 'Long Tail'"

"Bob Struble, President/CEO of HD Radio developer iBiquity Digital, says in his latest column on the iBiquity website that HD technology can help radio address the Long Tail of consumer interest... Analog radio cannot effectively serve the Long Tail, Struble writes... But HD Radio, he says, gives radio broadcasters an economically viable way to address the Long Tail with niche formats on HD2 and HD3 subchannels... I got a bunch of thought provoking comments on The Long Tail column, and the usual suspects questioning my sanity and family background."

http://www.hdradio.com/the_buzz.php?thebuzz=315

"Harvard Business Review: Should You Invest in the Long Tail?"

"Chris Anderson, editor of Wired magazine, argues that the sudden availability of niche offerings more closely tailored to their tastes will lure consumers away from homogenized hits. The 'tail' of the sales distribution curve, he says, will become longer, fatter, and more profitable. Elberse, a professor at Harvard Business School, set out to investigate whether Anderson's long-tail theory is actually playing out in today's markets. She focused on the music and home-video industries -- two markets that Anderson and others frequently hold up as examples of the long tail in action -- reviewing sales data from Nielsen SoundScan, Nielsen VideoScan, the online music service Rhapsody, and the Australian DVD-by-mail service Quickflix. What she found may surprise you: Blockbusters are capturing even more of the market than they used to, and consumers in the tail don't really like niche products much."

http://www.citeulike.org/user/mmkurth/article/2984768

There is no viable business-model for niche formats on the HD channels - Struble should have known that, since he is a Harvard MBA Baker Scholar. Perhaps, he doesn't read the Harvard Busines Review, or more likely, is just lying, as we all know.

"CC Radio's Format Lab gone?"

"So bottom line, the Format Lab is no longer available on the web and has cut some of its formats down to the most successful/desirable. The www.iHeartMusic.com website seems to only list the main audio streams of CC stations--not multicast HD formats--but does offer a few off to the side: erockster; Pride; Verizon New Music; Smooth Jazz; Real Oldies; Slow Jams and New Country. There used to be something close to 100 formats listed on the site."

http://www.rbr.com/radio/11252.html

"Bonneville pulls iChannel Music"

"Bonneville has pulled the plug on its iChannel Music HD Network and streaming. For the most part, it has replaced the HD multicast with WorldBand Media content (brokered ethnic programming). iChannel allowed indie bands to upload their music online for consideration... We commend Bonneville for giving it a shot—it allowed radio to expose a lot of new, unsigned indie bands from around the world. CC Radio's eRockster HD2 format is still around at a good handful of stations and still outstanding. If that gets shuttered, a good bunch of us just might be done with HD Radio listening altoghether."

http://www.rbr.com/radio/12113.html

Yup, these niche formats have been a failure! LOL!

Classical and Country are just two formats

I would hope that CPB & NPR/PRI would take a page from the Canadian CBC and put an HD-2 Program like CBC "Overnight" on their Midnight to Dawn Program Schedule Feeds featuring some of the International Broadcasters.

CBC Radio "Overnight"

Netherlands Radio Netherlands
Sweden Radio Sweden
Australia Radio Australia
Czech Republic Radio Prague
United Kingdom BBC World Service
Germany Deutsche Welle

Australia Radio Australia
Has the potential to makes every CPB
FM HD-Radio HD-2 Channel a World

For Christian Religious Broadcasters HD-2 Channels that Broadcast 24/7 may be a more 'cost effective' alternative to running their own 24/7 FM Radio Station.

For the Saudi Arabian Government who pays for 2/3s of the Imams in American Mosques having a 100+ FM HD-Radio Stations across the USA broadcasting an HD-2 "Muslim" Channel in Arabic and English would fit into their scheme to bring Allah to America.

What the whole medical reform comes down to is the rich corporate america's profits Vs American citizen's lives. Nothing more!!!

No matter how much corporate america spend on advertising, purchasing the media and buying off politicians, I will always vote with my brain and not with "what's on popular TV" or by false FUD, (Fear, Uncertainty and Doubt) spread by the foolish.

Politicians who use this tactic and take corporate campaign donations will have a hard time being re-elected.

The solution?
Control the greed of corporate america by returning TRUE capitalistic competition or remove the industry and replace it with a social program.

Doing nothing is destroying american citizens for overseas corporate profiteers. Totally unjustifiable!

"We Might Want to Keep an Eye on ION"

"If the commission embraces the notion that secondary digital streams really do constitute separate licenses that can be separately assigned, one could easily argue that radio stations that have opted to transmit digital streams (i.e., 'HD Radio') should also be permitted to sell those streams as separately licensed stations... For one, the number of radio stations could theoretically double or triple overnight. This might not have the cataclysmic effect of, say, the injection of nearly 700 new FM allotments through the notorious Docket No. 80-90 a quarter century ago, but you never know. At a minimum, if the law of supply and demand were to hold true, the overnight doubling/tripling of stations would likely depress each station's value. And such a rapid increase in the number of stations would logically lead to a similarly rapid increase in competition for audiences and revenues. Are we all ready for that?"

http://www.rwonline.com/article.aspx?articleId=76922&mnu_id=14

Yup, this is what Struble is banking on - destroying adjacent-channel stations, replaceing their programming with the HD2s/HD3s.

I doubt seriously that IBOC is going to help radio at all. Their listener base is rapidly moving away from them to other media that allows individualized playlists and infinite choice. Those people will not likely go back to having someone else choose the ~200 tracks that they will hear day in and day out. Besides, people are sick to death of 22 minutes of commercials in every hour of programming.

Community Service Begins with the Truth

http://www.radiotalkingpoints.com/articles/2009_radiotalkingpoints_article_0043_Oct_16_CommunityService.html

Today, my wife called me about the helicopters and Air Force One flying over our house. Mr. Obama had just left New Orleans a few hours earlier, after giving a speech. As far as I am concerned, the only speech that needs to be given to New Orleans, is to honestly tell them they should not live there, and how can we help them permanently leave?

Community Service is already performed when most workers practically donate their labors to the community, and only retain 20 percent of the value they created? Community service is nodding your head that you will pay on a mortgage for thirty years, for a house really built in thirty days or thirty weeks? Community service is paying energy utility bills the size of house mortgages, or insurance payments the size of mortgages, or going to school and paying for that education for almost a decade?

Community Service begins with telling the truth. I can tell you what you want to hear, but that is not the only, or best fork in the road. Earlier in the week, a trucker had called the Rush Limbaugh show and said that Rush was successful because he told them what the audience wanted to hear. He then went on to say how bad the economy was with trucks sitting in truck stops and not moving freight.

Rush Limbaugh is talented enough to be a political commentator without resorting to the nuances of deception that can waste people's time, and I enjoy his show because he does not practice those kinds of actions to produce his show. The football commentator John Earl Madden never had to do that in almost thirty years?

Now we know that some think that politics is full of fakes, and head nods, and the common denominator is who gets in the voting booth. If you can explain politics, like you can explain football, guess who does not want listening to Rush Limbuagh explain how or why the ball is moving up or down the field, when young football fans can not only tell you who plays on the teams, but what their passing, rushing, and scoring histories are?

By the way I must pubicly apologize for calling John Madden Mr. McMadden, who inspired some of us to buy Raider Football jackets. I might as well start posting all my web pages with the preface "draft" due to typographical errors? Well, I try to share my thoughts that same day, which does not always work out that well, as you can gather from the long disclaimer at the end of all web pages on this site. I also sometimes think faster than I type, so occassionally I will forget to type a word or two.

I'll see if I can remove those limitations from my writings. Speaking of limitations, if the media distorts your views, how do you counter the perception that the media hates you? By demanding that they retract statements of error before they even ask to interview you? Otherwise you have a serious problem bragging about an inbox full of interview requests, and then claim that the media hates you? Well, that must be the mysterious side of a Captain Kirk that will have to work on that part of the equation?

That is plausible of course, a political commentator that works full time is not going to have a job if he went out and started interviewing every reporter that emailed him. So that leaves the big media outlets, and they are heavily vested in some political views? The only reason I say that is to figure out a way for the media to redeem themselves? I have confidence that Rush Limbaugh will figure that out, or simply enjoy watching them try to get a good night's sleep in the bed they made for themselves?

I believe that President Obama is flexible, he is not totally rigid, but I also believe that only occurs when 400 lb defensive lineman, are shown incapable of stopping the quarterback sacks coming his way? Funny how people paint others that are trying to redeem the guy and save his career, as some kind of haters? Ditto to you members of Congress out there?

When you have a political agenda where people are hiding it, in my view, it is much easier to expose the hiding, then participate in it? Rush Limbaugh recently bragged he would tweak the media to make them do this or that. Well, more power to you Rush, I might skip the next couple of plays or just stop talking about you until that pans out?

Loyalty is not a tool to invent fools, it is the description of those who follow those with the principals and ideals that are what define America as the shining star, the light on the hill, or a point of light? That's my draft idea?

If you want an example of a politically correct environment, if you want to see how government will control your life, just look at the life of a truck driver? Truck drivers are not sitting in truck stops only because they are not moving freight, but because of government rules that ignore scientific reports that say 72 hour rest breaks are not necessary, and Democrats in charge of changing those rules, just ignore the issue?

Well, that is the problem today as well, with the little child, told to give a speech asking why people hate President Obama? Just because you do not agree with someone, does not mean that they hate them. If I gave a waiter an order at a restaurant, and he ignored me, and came back with lobster instead of the steak that I ordered, would I be mad about being ignored? People are mad at President Obama, because he is ignoring them, and apparently has chosen to ignore the simple fact that America has checks and balances?

The reason why Mr. Obama is mad, is because he chooses to ignore those checks and balances, and has decided to hallucinate in his imaginary mind, that there is something wrong with people that do not agree with him? That is the definition of denial, that is the definition of subversion, deception, ignorance, and many more things? Mr. President, voters do not make the Presidency, the oath of office makes the Presidency.

Anyone can fill ballot boxes with voting ballets, it is the oath of office, when you serve as an executive representing the President of the United States, that makes you special, and your faithful ability to honor, abide, protect, cherish, advance, support, and to be an ambassador to the world, not to fundamentally change America, but to fundamentally support why freedom is the special part of America that we hold out to all countries to emulate and embrace.

These thoughts ran through my mind, as I heard the echo of President Bush, Sr., advocating for the return of civility to the political conversations today. Mr. President Obama, I will not civilly endorse your potential ignorance of the Constitution of the United States, or the looting of America that has been clearly the objective of the political winds represented by the voting public, who trust public officials to represent them, not to remake America, but to preserve the checks and balances, to preserve the fundamental freedoms, liberties and advance the ideals that make America strong.

I can think of the excessive numbers of Czars, I can think of the Russian advisors possibly disguised as weapons inspectors (in my opinion they could care less how many warheads we have) whose advise would be invaluable in a civil war, I can think of the health care plans that are clearly being financed so that if there is indeed a fundamental change in Congress to throw out those who created the new entitlements, by the end of those terms of newly elected members who replaced them, new entitlement programs will be so expensive, the Republic will not survive without the tripling of current tax rates, and the parties will switch chairs again? Who can promote Democracy if Democracy is simply looting disguised as musical chairs?

This is not a conclusive conversation, I am just pointing out the obvious things? Emotions are what define the degree of outrage expressed by an event, policy, or even idea, and that is what makes America special, Mr. President. Civility requires that we express that outrage when it clearly represents that we sense the destruction of the Republic, the destruction of our freedoms, the destruction of our liberties, the destruction of our economy, and the destruction of the ability to worship our God in pride, and not as though He was someone, or something to be ashamed of, that we must lash our tongues in silence.

So the president is fired up? I don't see the President fired up about America, I don't see the President fired up about preserving the fundamental principals of our government, I don't see the President fired up about changing the way citizens around the world cherish, adore, or promote fundamental freedoms that protect citizens as children, that do so without treating them like children? Do you see the President fired up about promoting to the citizens around the world, and asking the question, are they trusting their leaders as brothers, or as jailers ready to throw them in the grave when ever it suits them?

President Obama has a science advisor that wants to paint all roofs white? I wonder who has a relationship with paint companies, or unions? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that scientists for the EPA are fired, or inspector generals who are doing their jobs? Is it civility Mr. President Bush Sr., that we need to define foreign terrorists as anything other than people that deserve hanging? Or is civility now defined as not being American, not fighting for your Constitutional rights, such as reminding the government that seizure of property is to control it, not necessarily occupy it?

If we can not see a President, fired up enough about the truth of the matter, to tell the people of New Orleans, to rebuild there, is to rebuild a death trap, just who or what is being fired up? In the open water, are injured fish fired up? Sharks never tire, the silent guardians of the ocean never tire, who are always there, and I do not see a President fired up, I see him beginning to panic, due to his imaginary injuries, and the sharks of failure will sense that soon and will eat his career?

So did Captain Kirk, did he inspire by creating drama, or did he inspire by leadership, by his faith in his ship, by his faith in his engineers, so that when he said, give me all you got Scotty, he got 10 percent more? Faith is in that which is not seen? When America was given the United States Constitution, it got ten percent more.

The United States Constitution does not depend on the observations of failure, it does not depend upon the liberty of greed, which defines slavery, it provides the foundation of the road that mankind must ride, with the heavy machinery that must carry the abundant gifts of God granted to his children, defined as the fruit of liberty?

Being that this is the most powerful keyboard in the world, able to distinguish the truth from reality, emotion, from sanity, and hate from ignorance, in the space of one article, in the space of one moment in time, and yet last forever, so that you may be defined as a communicator, and not a director, you have to ask yourself one question......

Do you feel lucky?

Anita Dunn, Interim White House Communications Director, former top advisor to Obama’s political campaign, and wife of Obama’s personal lawyer, Robert Bauer. … Anita Dunn is not just an Obama hanger-on. She is part of his inner circle, one of his top aides, along with David Axelrod, Rahm Emmanuel, and Robert Gibbs. What does it mean that someone in that position proffers one of the greatest monsters the world has ever seen for emulation?

Well, that's pretty disturbing if she actually believes the Chinese revolution was something to admire? When people in the United States talk like that, and do not rebuke the violence and looting associated with such political movements, do actually believe that foreign nations are not going to gear up their military production lines to deal with an apparent new emerging threat, since silence is accompanying these frequent speeches that are cropping up prior to the hiring of these people?

Are they just young people that really have not considered the depth of the pool they are thinking about jumping into, without being able to swim? Well, we can only dedicate what time we have, to pointing out that these stubborn viewpoints are frequently made by mal-adjusted, angry people that have not socially embraced their peers?

One of the key definition in the Declaration of Independence, is the word liberty, and used in that time frame, was a key word associated with freedom from sin, and the curses associated with sin? I come to this conclusion after reading from Kenneth Copeland, "From Faith to Faith, ISBN 0-88114-843-1" where he talks about the definition of lasciviousness, which is a lack of restraint. So this is another nuance we can add to the definition of the word liberal, not someone free from sin, but one who wants to politically liberate the country from the United States Constitution, by supporting lasciviousness?

Isn't this how William Safire used to write?

Have a great day.

controlling spending is one fundamental principals of the US Government, the United States began with limiting credit to no more than two years worth of expenditures. Talk of all these entitlement programs, and more stimulous packages would not be done if he was against these policies.

While he may admire Lincoln, has he become more like Grant, but without the military experience? Grant oversaw one of the first financial collapses, this has been done before?

Never mind. A Google search reveals that it's a 200 watt ham radio
"lowfer" in Pen Yan, NY. Interesting!

That is interesting. Not the lowfer part, but the call. Generally, the call would indicate a region 2 licensed station operating in region 6 (IIRC, region 2 is the NY area, region 6 is California).

Wim (or anyone),

So, an early post stated "the longer the better" but you say not so long. What is a good length to try? I assume I'll want to experiment with longer and shorter. Bought 24 gauge speaker wire, 100 ft. for $6.50 at Home Depot. But I'm nervous now, I don't want to do anything until I understand.

I presume you mean, disconnect the antenna during storms with lightening flashes. OK.

So, I'm thinking there are three kinds of potential damage from a long wire: static, lightening, and overload from a strong signal.

There are four ways to connect the antenna that I've encountered: miniplug into antenna out, alligator clip to whip, bare wire wrapped around whip, and inductive coupler (insulated wire wrapped around tube placed over whip). (Leaving the balun out for the moment)

Am I right that too strong a radio signal (from too long a wire) can hurt the radio? I presume this is true anytime too strong a signal reaches the inside electronics. But my brother tells me the whip is connected to an internal amplifier that the antenna input jack is not connected to. So maybe the antenna input jack is safe in terms of overloading signal from the long wire. And maybe the inductor can also induce too strong a signal in the antenna which is then amplified, causing damage, is this so? So, connecting the wire via the antenna out jack and miniplug is safe with regard to overload, but inductive coupler, alligator clip on whip, and bare wire wrapping around whip (i.e., all connections to whip) are not. True?

As for lightening, it seems all connection methods are dangerous. For static, all but the inductive coupler are dangerous. Right?

If I can figure out how to safely connect the antenna to the radio, then is a good way to solve this noise issue to use a very long wire? Or will it just pick up more residential EMG noise? I am in a residential area, I have apartment buildings on two sides, 100+ feet away, house on third side.

Maybe tuning to wavelengths is the only way to get a wire to elevate signal above noise.

Thanks very much!

Jim

JIM K - Here is a visualization explanation that is not technically correct.

The Long Wire Matching Transformer {Balun/UnUn} incorporates a HI-Z Winding and a LO-Z Winding plus an effective {efficient} means of 'coupling' {energy transfer} which is usually a Ferrite Core.
-coupling-
The 'nominal' Impedance of a long wire {random wire} Antenna is 450~500 Ohms [HI-Z] and captures the RF Signal {relative Higher Voltage and Lower Current}.
-to-
The 'nominal' Impedance of a Coax Cable is 50~75
Ohms [LO-Z] and conducts the RF Signal {relative Lower Voltage and Higher Current}.

NOTE - The Balun/UnUn is an Matching Transformer that is designed to work/operate at Radio Frequencies.

Consider the common wall-wart 120VAC to 6VDC that is designed to work/operate at AC Power {50~60 Hz} Low Frequency : It too is a Transformer.

Would appreciate any and all opinions on ?

e.g., how good is the HF section, as compared to...?

G313 worth the additional cost ?

Thanks,

Brenda, here is the answer:

WE2XGR is an -experimental- license for 500 kHz ham transmissions.

The /2 or /6 designators do NOT indicate the ham call area as you would normally expect. Rather, they indicate the number of the station using that particular experimental call.

To explain further (and these are just examples, not real calls):

W1ABC (in the first call area) is the operator of WE2XGR/14

W7XYZ (in the seventh call area) is the operator of WE2XGR/9

To summarize, even though your real ham call might be W1ABC and you live in New England (first call district), when you are operating on the 500 kHz band, you would use WE2XGR/x, NOT your usual call of W1ABC. The /x designator just shows that you are one of "x" number of operators using the experimental call, NOT that you are geographically in the "x" call district.

One final REAL example: There IS a legitimate station using WE2XGR/17 and yet as we all know, there is no 17th call district. It just means he was the 17th person to sign up to participate in the experiment.

Hope this helps.

Think of "impedance" as hose diameter. You can dump water from a skinny hose (low Z) into a fat hose (Hi Z) but not the other way around (most of the water is spilled).

The matching "Bal Un" is usually an autotransformer which converts the 450 Ohms (max Z of the random wire) to 50 Ohms (good match for RG-58, RG-59, RG-6, RG-8X, etc.) Note that at resonance, the random wire is already at 50 Ohms, so the transformer lowers it to ca. 6 Ohms, but it works fine for receiving).

A second benefit is that the "BalUn" is DC grounded everywhere (provided you ground the cable sheath where it enters your house per NEC). This will keep static charges out of your radio. Your brother is right. Whips are usually "active" antennas, with an extra transistor to convert the Hi Z antenna to Low-Z, to match the EXT ANT input, which you should use, if you have a proper coaxial deed.

I monitor 10140 24/7. The only voice I ever hear are Mexican fishing boats. Its a CW/Digital ham band, and OTH radar. I suspect you have an intermod image of some sort.

It's not a ham call. It's an experimental radio license (according to the FCC):

WE2XGR WARREN H. ZIEGLER 0151-EX-PL-2007 New experimental to operate in 505-510 kHz and 510-515 kHz for propagation studies and research of LF communications systems.

The 6 means something else than what you thought, probably that this is beacon number 6.

Usually stations of this type operate in several locations on a rotating schedule.

Look up the 14.1 mHz beacon system. They operate across the world on a rotating basis, with various power levels.

(addendum 10/18/2009)

Well, if you thought the argument about minimum wage was entertaining, the outsourcing job is tied to it? Why is it important to defend the minimum wage, and paint it in a certain positive light, even if there is not a positive one? Could it be that it involves less than four percent of the population? Or does it? How many businesses peg their wages one or two dollars above the minimum wage, which creates an atmosphere within the work force, well, that's what I should be getting paid?

Well, if machines are the real engines of labor, pegging the minimum wage has a direct coorelation to outsourcing? Which has a direct coorelation to the currency value? Not everyone has the same currency? Well, John Stossel's book claims that outsourcing has lost 392 million American jobs since 1992 (it was written in 2006?).

If that number is correct John, we are seriously underestimating the illegal immigration problem? How many workers are in the United States? If you can't tell me how many jobs there are in the United States, which must be everyone that files a W2 form, and not business owners, investors, retirees, etc., if 392 million jobs were lost, that would mean that people had to change jobs frequently?

He goes on to say that 411 million jobs were created from 1992 thru 2006? I'm not convinced that national media can paint this picture in any kind of positive light, when they refuse to explain their base numbers, but it confuses people, and gets people to shut up on a local level?

Closing sweat shops results in underage prostitution overseas?
Really?
If people are so poor that they have to make their kids work, what makes you think they are inclined to have the money to go boozing and whoring?

Such arguments only help despots around the world stay in power? Such arguments only disguise the real problems and delay the answers?

This highlights a serious disconnect between what employers need and what schools, who may employ teachers who are not producing educations that actually stimulate the economy, other than save their own pathetic jobs?

Blame the price of lumber? No one wants to manage forests better?
It used to be that young people could build furniture, and not work in
smelly plastic factory (saw dust is not fun either, without minimizing it)

instead of living in an an empty apartment with no furniture?

There are no easy answers, but thanks to thinking like this, we can at least stop saving the pathetic jobs? But because employers don't teach anything anymore, but demand to be given highly trained employees from day one, can we stop pointing fingers at the federal government alone? Isn't that why the military is so successful, they train their own people, instead of depending on others to guess what they need?

How about this, more of you that are doing the hiring, you do the training, instead of some clueless union teacher who has not worked a day in the private sector in years?
Is this the kind of thinking you want to happen when your economy is being shredded, and teachers are cranking out students in record numbers?

This stimulous package is what has destroyed jobs, or is in the

As you are in a residential area, start with about 20 ft. there may be some bends in the wire (for example some part horizontally, some vertically. I checked the I-manual. The receiver has a DX/LOC switch.
When you are listening to a weak station and the clearness doesn’t reduce when switching from DX to LOC, your wire is long enough (maybe somewhat to long for that particular frequency band).

Correct.

OK, If there is no DC bath between the inner conductor and the shield of the cable, you can have build-up of static charge that may damage the input circuitry. Strong overload (due to strong stations) will very likely not damage the input, but may result in bad reception of signals at certain frequency bands.

In my opinion, the insulated wire wrapped around a tube place over the whip, looks like inductive coupling, but is capacitive coupling (no direct electrical connection between wire and whip). This method of coupling reduces the coupling for low frequency. By varying the number of turns you can figure out the best coupling to your receiver. That means sufficient signal from the antenna to overcome the receiver noise, but not too much to get intermodulation (overload) problems.

I presume this is true anytime too strong a signal

Depends on type of receiver, I don't know the inside of the G5.

Many portable receivers show overload problems when connecting long wire (for example 100ft) directly to the whip (electrically connected). By wrapping the insulated wire around the whip, you reduce the coupling (especially for the low frequency ranges like AM and LW), hence reducing change of overload.

> As for lightening, it seems all connection methods are dangerous. For Depends. When the wire is insulated from the antenna (what you call inductive coupling), static charge may build-up until it reaches the ultimate strength of the insulation. When exceeded, your whip might be subjected to static discharge.

You can bleed the static charge by providing a DC path to ground. Mostly when the bare antenna wire touches the building construction (wood, concrete, etc), static charge will not build-up.

You may try this. When you have a significant part of the wire outside, away from electronics, that will improve reception, but be aware of overload as mentioned earlier (so use the capacitive coupling with the insulated wire wrapped around the whip). Note that this is not my favorite solution (I prefer the coaxial feed and have all antenna parts away from electronics).

Depends on the radio. The input gain device may be adversely affected by too strong a signal. Being driven into saturation can result in failure of some devices. This was a problem with some Sony radios. It was a problem on a few inexpensive radios. It was a problem on a number of early solidstate radios.

Today, receivers have overload protection before the first active device. Sony installed diodes before the front end of their affected devices. And most input devices used today have sufficient headroom in circuit to prevent front end overload in all but the most extreme cases. Buffers, and IF amps will more quickly overload than many front ends, today.

But if you're talking about SW, unless you're near Antigua, or living in Western Europe, you're not likely to encounter signals strong enough to cause overload problems. A few domestic SW players, if you're close enough. But not nearly what it used to be.

So, depending on your location, your concern may be a non-issue.

That said, it's something that's worth bearing in mind.

Hi,

Just some "good" listening on the HF ranges.

But, would like to pick up MIL and aero, but I guess only the G305 does that.

In your opinion, is it worth getting the G313 for the superior HF capability, and giving up the G305 with it's vhf/uhf capability ?

I can always use my GRE scanner I guess for the vhf/uhf, but it sure would be nice to have all together.

Guess, in a way, I'm asking how good the G305 HF really is ?

What would its capabilities be comparable to (brand, model, or price range ?)

Thanks for help,
Bob

In a way, yes, however, being in the continental US one cannot pick a KH6 (Hawaii), KL7 (Alaska) or KP4 (Puerto Rico) vanity prefix, and I'm certain there are other examples.

One could, if living in California, pick a W1, W3, N1, N3, or any other sort of prefix, etc., that would apply to the continental USA.

That's likely a technological solution that will pass into history before we get to non-analog built-in car radio.

More manufacturers are integrating iPod into their factory sound systems. Not just an Aux jack but an actual iPod port with code to access the iPod O/S from the radio face. I installed an aftermarket interface in my car 6 years ago, and haven't been without that functionality since, in any of my cars.

FM solutions to iPod connectivity have lost a lot of ground in the last couple of years. They'll be hard to come by before long. Long before analog passes from radios in the US.

Which nationaly known/brand name stores sell those solid state refrigerators that are about four to about five something feet high/tall? The kind of solid state refrigerators that use a heat sink looking thingy that has fins on it is what I am talking about.I want to buy a refrigerator like that.

The divorced Bell South woman (she used to live next door to me) in Natchez owns one, but I reckon she has changed her cell phone number.I can't call her and ask her where she bought hers.The only ones the Lowe's store sells are only about 3 cubic capacity up to about four cubic feet capacity.I don't want one that small.

You may want to qualify this with the fact that these 30,000 jobs were created with one small program that used a very very small fraction of the stim. This is simply the first program to be quantified.

Why? Conventional refrigeration systems are about 8-10 times more efficient than a Peltier cooler. The only plus to the Peltier is that you don't have a compressor and circulating fluid, unless you count the need for airflow over the heatsink to keep the hot-side temperature low enough so the cold side of the Peltier device has a chance to cool something other than itself.

I have a small wine-cooler-size Peltier fridge, and that's about all it's good for (well, substitute soft drinks for wine in my case). The particular unit I have can't be set to cool below 44F, and practically speaking, it won't cool more than 15-20F lower than ambient temperature. During the summer when our kitchen is typically 75-80F, the "cooler" won't get lower than 60F, and in order to manage THAT, I need to pull it off the shelf about every other week and give it a good once-over with an air can to get rid of the dust bunnies that collect on the fan and heat sink. It also pulls more current than a "dorm-sized" conventional fridge.

When that thing craps out, I'm definitely not replacing it with another Peltier unit... what good's a cooler that can't keep beer cold?

Peltier cooler? The name sounds familiar to me.My big G.E.refrigerator has had it! I am more than fed up with any and all refrigerators that have a motor/compressor.I am currently using an old Dometic propane/electric RV vehicle refrigerator which dates back to the 1980s, it works perfectly, I bought it at a Goodwill store back around 1985.I want to buy a larger solid state/peltier refrigerator.I don't care if it (solid state/peltier) uses more electricity, I can afford it.

Wow...

We have one that we take on long road trips that will actually freeze bottles of tea (not so much my Pepsi, since it's under pressure). I've seen it get as low as -4C, with the temperature inside the car around 70-75. It does, admittedly, force a lot of air past a pretty large pair of Peltier junctions (it draws enough current that I've had to repair the internal DC power connection once, and the accessory cigar-lighter socket in the car once.) It's not a really large cooler, about .4 cubic meter or less, so there's a good ratio for cooling. Biggest hassle I have with it is if the lid is not tightly sealed, the panel inside the cooler that contacts the Peltier (to transfer the cooling) will frost up and it gets very inefficient in a hurry.

No, I'm pretty experienced at this sort of stuff - experienced enough

The viagra of truth is that Obama and all administration officials refuse to appear on Fox News, and are unable to dispute the facts that the hundreds of journalists and citizens that Fox News represents, and continue their diabolical plan to hoodwink the poorest Americans with their version of events that ignores facts, opinions, wishes, and responsibilities expected by citizens?

The only thing getting blown around in the White House, are the lies and hidden agendas disguised as good intentions, with nebulous money trails, proven by the lack of legislative language in Congressional Bills, and the refusal to write legal legislation that the man on the street can understand?

Mao Tse Tung (Mao Zedong)?

Do activists, dream of the day they can bring China to the international court and charge political descendants of Mao with genocide? Or is that the flavor of the Bush bashing month that we don't believe in fair laws, but only the ones we can enforce, or get away with? From what little I know of the Bush family, I sense a humility and lack of defense, of whatever you want to say about them. If I wrote this letter in China (which I would not), then you would be reading about someone getting a shot in the head?

Bill Maher said he wished the United States was like China? If he was rotting in prison, would he say that, right before they put him under the knife, to remove his organs? Would they wake him up? That's not a very good political policy, and only a temporary solution, the drugs they use for the process, do irreversible damage, resulting in death in months? Well, they write entire books on social behaviors, and there is a political sickness when crime is more industrious than work? It makes little sense to fix what is not broken?

While you ponder that rot gut, there is a smear campaign to charge the military in Iraq of genocide, and yet somehow they choose to ignore the Chinese agenda. So we say, Kuwait, an inconvenient truth? Getting back to Mao Zedong, this is a disturbing fellow. First of all the reference to Maoism vision of government is a "continuing revolution". Well, the United States Constitution is the framework for our "continuing revolution", so I find the stretch that this fellow was someone to admire fairly revolting.

Why is he revolting? This was not a political revolution, this was the rape of a nation? Deng Xiaoping took power after 1976, and abandoned many of the Mao policies? Why is this fellow this alarming? Mao tried his revolutionary ideas through grass roots organizations first through the industrial labor attempt at organizing, and when this failed, when to the uneducated, poor youth to go after the government (he was already on the run?) through the use of force. He assumed that his peaceful struggle against feudalism (rich ruling the poor) would not resolve his differences and instead opted for plans to use force.

The difference however in America would be the reverse of China, you would target the poor and the uneducated in the cities, instead of the rural areas? Is this why the press is so important in making sure even the uneducated are informed? In any event, the geography that allowed Mao to succeed in China, would not be present in America (for all you military wanna bees), also 60 years later, military science has progressed to the point that wars are to be avoided, not embraced.

Mao has been coined with a term called opportunism, which is basically seizing every opportunity to increase one's political influence. Mr. Obama is one who does practice that, although such tactics will not work in America simply because of the ethical values of voters, high degree of informational awareness, and a system of checks and balances that prevent the use of such tactics from succeeding (this is not something new). I have noticed however a trend in the educational system to attempt at eroding some of the cultural and political expectations that could make opportunism appear to be more effective, and that is being reversed as well.

Mao combined his views of opportunism with kulakism, which was basically looting. Killing not only occurred but was accompanied by torture such as shoving glowing gun barrels into the orifices of victims, or simply gutting them alive. This mass murderer continued other policies such as wanting to hear alternative viewpoints about how to run the government, called the Hundred Flowers Campaign, which was only a ruse to discover who his critics were, and then kill them.

Mao instituted the "Great Leap Forward", which brought about experimental financial endeavors such as banning private ownership of business, but largely failed, and was accompanied by terrified citizens distorting the numbers in order to create the impression of false gains, most likely to avoid being tortured. He also created a large number of public works projects, all of which crumbled into rubble, since they were built ignoring the use of trained engineers, which he thought were useless (wasting millions of citizens years of life in hard labor).

Mao was ultimately responsible for an estimated 20 to 70 million deaths, either by direct murder, or indirect starvation from various public policy initiatives. One could conclude from the history that if it were not for Japanese Imperialism, he might not have ever rose to power. Wild distortions in Feudalism and Capitalism were only concepts that could be explained to the youth who were not educated, and likely to perform in gang like activity, upon which the common denominator in the mass extinction of Chinese citizens occurred? How is that 70 percent high school drop out rate working for you now, Sheila Jackson Lee? Got you a white girl Mao fan in the White House?

Perhaps what is more disturbing is anyone who would follow these theories of communism, that destroy the weak, instead of protect them? I am not a current study of Chinese history, so I will leave it here for today, this was largely taken from Wikipedia, on the Internet. Mr. Obama should also take comfort that Mao believed in nuclear warfare?

Prostitution was a cultural nuance that also allowed Mao to ascend to power, by getting the support of women who wanted it abolished, and was a major factor in Japanese Imperialism (and to this day, concubines are still commonly a major occupation, if you call it that)?

Supporters of Mao point to increased life expectancy (after you got your mind right), although they don't point out that this happened on a global scale in other governments, and was not a special outcome of the Mao form of government, but the spread of more sanitary ways of living. Increased literacy rates are hard to gauge when compared to other governments, just what citizens were even allowed to read does not even come into the discussion, and there is a big difference between being able to read, and being able to pursue the ability to communicate, or even innovate.

The days of another Mao appearing are highly unlikely, simply because of the emergence of so much wealth, and wide spread education of how failed policies in the past are to be avoided. One could conjecture that current climate change debates may fuel the rise of another Mao type figure, and again, the widespread knowledge of warfare, and wealth, will prevail in preventing any resurgence of such figures in the future. He may still be an influence in today's culture, although perhaps as more of an inspiration to create social monsters, such as in the Star Trek series where they meet a cybernetic race called the Borg, who are not Swedish, but do dance to the tune of one mind.

There are many scientific studies not conducted on sociological impacts of various things in my opinion, and it is obvious to me, that the free minds of liberty, will always be superior than the shackled minds of authoritarian figures, simply out of motivational reasons. Fear can always provoke a fight, but creativity is what will lead us to the stars. One can only wonder at those heavenly riches, while looking at the rainbow, and ask ourselves, God promised not to destroy us, and if he is able to make that promise, so must we all?

We should beware that the pursuit of "internet neutrality" is an effort to pursue another Mao ascention or preventing the education of voters on the issues? Dumb voters are dangerous voters?

Resistance if futile, you must comply.......with the truth!

Can you smell el el el el el el el el el .........what the Rock of Truth, who has the smartest eyebrow in the Universe, and the whitest teeth known to man, is ..........................cooking?

Keeping it real

You know what song I like from Fergie? Glamorous, "if you ain't go not money take your broke ....home?" Voters will be saying in 2010 and 2012, if we ain't got no money take your broken promises home? Now, I don't produce Fergie, and I don't endorse all her lyrics, and I am not going to go much further down that road right now. At one time I spent a lot of time preparing for a musical career, but that's another story.

A lot of musicians make their money through shock language, and that is a culture all its own, which floats through the movies, and other entertainment industries. So we wink at what they do, and a lot of entertainment people do not take well to criticism, and it is sometimes pointless to do so, and they feel it is show, and not expect the consumers to actually act out the lyrics, or ideas? If they don't laugh at themselves and point towards the light, well, we see social consequences? I've seen a lot of talent over the years, and I think they limit their careers by using shock lyrics, and they know who they are. Thanks Fergie, I like some of your songs.

I love lots of music, from Rock and Roll, to some pop tunes, but I don't have the stuff jamming all the time like I did in my youth. Maybe it is because of the shock lyrics, I don't know. Sometimes if you can't wink at Madonna, or Lady Ga Ga, and others, you loose your edge, and you don't dwell on it? So that's what capitalism does, keep it real?

You can't Uncle Tom, Uncle Sam? We just want to be glamorous Mr. Obama, and get our bling bling, by being all we can be, not all we can guess? The saga continues? Well, we sometimes say to ourselves their best music is yet to come? I have heard the most amazing gospel music lately from Joel Osteen and Lakewood Church, they have some really new stuff out. Back to the song, No Quarter...

President Obama and other administration officials refuse to appear on Fox news, yet accuse Fox news of advancing a particular view, or as an arm of the Republican party? Just what does that mean? Did the Republican Party or over half the country that is now voicing their displeasure at the White House cease to exist in their imaginary minds?

White House administration officials accuse Fox News of commentary that is not news, but viewpoints? Every show that I have watched of Glenn Beck, he has invited, has begged the White House to prove him wrong, and to come on the air? If you are going to cover political news, you have to cover it from the perspective of the voters, and not the politicians? Isn't that who is in charge, the voters?

This kind of behavior is going to eventually demand that we amend the Constitution to not allow domestic spending programs to be effective for 36 months after approval, in order to remove spending that is clearly not necessary spending but political payback that is disguised as public crisis? The White House and Congress is unable to refute the the facts that hundreds of journalists, citizens, and others represent by Fox News, and continue to plan on hood winking the poorest Americans with their version of events that ignore facts, opinions, wishes, and market forces that are expected by all of the voters, and not just the partisan view point?

Nebulous money trails, proven by the lack of legislative language by Congressional Bills and committee hearings, and the refusal to write legislative language that the man on the street can understand quickly, are becoming the hallmarks of current, past, and pending failure(s) by the White House? The White House counters with the statement that they will appear on Fox News, but the real test of hormones will be how often? Anyone willing to plug the numbers into a spread sheet will show you pie charts that point to what conclusions based on how often they appear?

Speaking of numbers, they were debating the minimum wage on Fox News when I was writing this. It is an important subject, because some employer business plans revolve around treating employees so poorly, they depend on people quitting to keep a steady flow of fresh faces? If less than 4% of the workforce is paid the minimum wage, how much is paid within 20% of the minimum wage? Should minimum wage be different for teenagers under 18, or do you want to protect the youth that can't wait to get out of the house and on their own? Like I said earlier in other articles, this is an important aspect of your currency value, and your ability to have a functioning economy, one based on merit, skills, and diligence, not one based on fear? Do you fear how often you appear on Fox News? You are gonna be there anyway?

Quote: He was standing in the hole waiting for something to develop....and WHAP! He got developed? (John Earl Maddon, unrelated conversational quote, a scenario however that applied to a football player who thought he knew what was going on in the game, and got schooled, seemed like an appropriate metaphoric epiphany at this point in the conversation?)

Resistance if futile, you must comply.......with the truth!

Can you smell el el el el el el el el .....what the Rock of Truth, who has the smartest eyebrow in the Universe, and the whitest teeth known to man, is .....cooking?

Being that this is the most exciting, most entertaining, fact finding, brain busting, fun loving, liberal egg shell mind crunching, invincible smacketh downeth erectus amongus, you can't see the truth coming, but you know it is anyway, sonic boom of Conservatism, and, most powerful keyboard in the world,

do you feel lucky?

If you think you can take on the White House, and write circles around

That's a rather unfortunate analogy. To the flow of water, a skinny hose would have a high impedance, and a fat hose would have a low impedance.
But the principle is 'sort of' correct.

Although it's certainly high, I don't think that the maximum impedance of a random wire is limited to 450 ohms. Nevertheless, the transformer still provides a better match than you would get with a direct connection between the coax and the wire, and you don't lose as much signal.

At frequencies where the wire presents a relatively low impedance, the transformer may transform the impedance of the antenna to a value a lot less than the coax. On those frequencies, you could actually get less signal than you would if there had been a direct connection.

However, it's a case of swings and roundabouts. For most of the spectrum between (say) 1 and 30MHz, you will get more signal (and, on some frequencies, quite a lot more). On a few relatively narrow parts of the spectrum, you will get somewhat less.

>A second benefit is that the "BalUn" is DC grounded everywhere >(provided you ground the cable sheath where it enters your house per >NEC). This will keep static charges out of your radio.

You don't really need an un-un to do this. You can add an RF choke (or high-ish value resistor) at some point across the coax. This won't do much for lightning protection, but it will prevent the build-up of a static charge on the wire. However, an un-un will probably give you more against the effects of nearby lightning strikes.

You should at least provide a good ground for the coax screen at the antenna feedpoint. Hopefully, this will be remote from the house. For good luck, you can also ground it where it enters the house (and anywhere else you care to along its length), but it's the ground at the antenna end which is the most important.

My Peltier is a Dometic RM2401 Gas Electric Made in Sweden refrigerator.It says so on the top front of the refrigerator.(Dwight David Eisenhower [[Ausenhauer]] was of Jewish Swedish Ancestry)

A buddy of mine had a camping trailer.He and his wife went to Texas on a Rattlesnake Hunt.They didn't take their trailer with them.While they were GTT (Gone To Texas) their camping trailer caught on fire, the fire burnt his trailer up and the fire spread to his shop and burnt up a lot of stuff.He said the refrigerator in his trailer was running on propane.His insurance covered every thing that got burnt up.

I love all of this attention! Typical of IBOC boosters to launch a series of personal attacks, when they have no counter-arguments. I've heard it all - LOL!

I love this denial of reality! Typical of HD radio nutcakes to ignore the arguments put forth and the realies presented and launch a series of cut/pastes when they can't engage in a discussion. Post a& run!

Oh wait, you're tending to that "blog" that thousands of bots read each day!

Not worried about them...just tired of them, your just adding white noise.

If you can't get involved with discussion...or understand that people come

Yesterday CBS had one episode of '60 minutes' that caught my attention. It was about a cancer patient that built some kind of an RF generator and tried it out on himself. However, it was not effective enough to destroy cancer in his body and he expired a few months later... His machine was shown and it consists of two cabinets. Also,a black radio receiver was shown that was not on, which reminded me of an NRD-xxx series,but it had a strap on the right side like my R-70.
Anybody watched '60 minutes'?

I'm sure you have. However, it's nice if the 'feedpoint' of the antenna goes through the primary (high impedance) winding of the un-un, and straight to a good RF ground. And, as you have a good RF ground, you might as well connect the coax screen to it too. The screen should remain pretty well RF-dead all the way back to the receiver, but there's no harm in grounding it at other points along its length to ensure absolutely zero pickup of noise on the coax.

These are a bunch of slanderous accusations and lies that the author cannot defend. Life expectancy went up in China because Socialism was making peoples lives so much better. In India life expectancy did not go up. China had relatively small prison populations compared with percentages of incarcated people under Mao. The USA has the highest in the world. No, shooting people who didn't believe an orthodoxy is not what was happening in China. In 1976 Mao Died and the Capitalists staged a coup, in which the condemned Mao's own wife (who was a hero of the revolution) put her on trial and she died in prison. During the time of the Chinese revolution mass protest occurred thorought the world in favor of socialism and revloution, and in favor of the Chinese Revolution in the 1960s. China was the only government that encouraged criticism and rebellion against people in power carrying out oppressive and elitist polices. In 1949 only 155 of the population of China could read, In 1976 it was 80%.

The most interesting thing about your post is that people in the USA are having to slander and attack Mao Tse Tung and the Chinese Revolution, because people the world over are having serious questions whether to throw out Capitalism as a economic and political system.

Just got in from the road. And well..

WLNG, Sag Harbor, New York....targeting...THE HAMPTONS. You think there's going to be money there?

FM, music...broadcasting in...

Wait for it.....

MONO!. No pilot.

Also this past weekend, the legedary WTOP-FM, Washington, DC.

MONO. No pilot. That's Bonneville. Hmmm, yeah..lots of money there, too. How 'bout that.

And three suburban signals in Chicagoland, WCPT-FM, WCPY-FM, WCPQ

FM Mono. No Pilot from 5a-9p, with talk, then ovenights (where there is virtually zero money) dance music, when nobody is listening.

That's Harvey Wells. Money there, too. So they make their money with FM Mono, and give away the FM Stereo.

Ok, that's three this weekend, alone, all of which are doing quite well, with mono on FM.

I'm going to be back on the road in another couple of weeks. You want more then?

Once the feed point is in the air, the "ground" lead is a "good RF ground" at some frequencies, and half an asymmetric dipole on others.
Grounding it at several points won't help at some freqs, specifically those where the distance to real ground (or between any other elements) is > 0.25 wavelengths. You quite possibly will have more of an antenna than a ground.

Coca-Cola exploits workers, students say
By Cui Jia (China Daily)

A university student who got a temporary job at Coca-Cola this summer through an employment agency is taking the soft-drink bottler to court, after he was beaten by staff members at the agency.

He is alleging that Coca-Cola showed poor management by hiring agencies that exploit workers.

He said he was beaten by staffers at the agency after he demanded pay for his work at Coca-Cola.

Along with three other university students, the 21-year-old student surnamed Liang from Tianjin was sent to Zhongcui Food Co., Ltd, a Coca-Cola bottling factory based in Hangzhou, after signing a contract with the Deqingzhiqiang employment agency in July this year.

The students' summer jobs were actually part of an undercover project to investigate the working conditions in Coca-Cola's plants.

The project was organized by a group of university students who published a report on the Internet last year on Coca-Cola's bottling factories. The students claimed that Coca-Cola turns a blind eye to illegal actions by their employment agencies and bottlers.

The students who worked at Coca-Cola this summer declined to give their full names or say what university they attend.

"A manager at the agency asked us to sign a contract stating that we will be paid the minimum wage of Hangzhou, which is 5.7 yuan (83 cents) an hour," Liang told China Daily yesterday. "But at the same time, he told us that we will only be paid 55 yuan for a day and we have to work 12 hours a day. We wonder how much Coca-Cola pays for the agency."

Zhen Zhiqiang, the agency's manager, said that the students are paid the minimum wage of Hangzhou and the students' claim that they were paid less than the minimum wage is not true.

The majority of the workers in the factory are temporary workers who are given no basic training when they start work, Liang said.

"Unlike the factory's full-time staff, we were given no protective gear such as gloves and ear plugs. We are also paid far less than them," Liang said. "Coca-Cola was seriously infringing the rights of agency workers by its poor management over the employment agencies and their factories."

Liang and the other university students quit their jobs on Aug 8 and were promised they would be paid on Aug 14. But when Liang went to the agency office on Aug 12 to confirm the paydate, he was beaten up by the agency staff, he said.

Officials at Coca-Cola in China said the dispute does not involve Coca-Cola.

"We are very sorry about what happened to Liang, but the conflict is strictly between Liang and the employment agency. The bottling factory and Coca-Cola are not aware of the situation," Zhai Mei, the associate external affairs director of Coca-Cola China, told China Daily yesterday.

The company and its bottlers not only "strictly comply with the laws and regulations regarding labor practices", but also "have strict supplier guiding principles" for its employment agencies, according to a statement released yesterday by Coca-Cola.

"We are continuing our internal investigations and if we find any violations of our labor policies, we will correct them," Zhai added.

Liang is taking the Deqingzhiqiang employment agency to court over the pay dispute and he will also sue Coca-Cola for being ignorant about the practices of their employment agencies and subcontractors.

Beaten because he might screw up the contract working for Coca Cola, at $.83 an hour?

How do you compare two societies that are on so opposite sides of the political and economic spectrum? If Americans are making $1 in ten minutes, and this student is making less than $1.00 an hour, what do you think will happen if they drop the dollar? Will America simply stop importing? China does not like the fact we want to protect the ability to make $1 in ten minutes? What do you think, Mr. Professor Oui Weed Obama?

I agree with community service and volunteer work, and I pledge to volunteer to call my member of Congress on a daily basis, as part of my service to the community, hey Jackass, or whatever name grabs your attention, can't wait to vote you out of office. Have a nice day.

From:

http://www.radiotalkingpoints.com/articles/2009_radiotalkingpoints_ar...

The rights of the People, not the States, to bear arms, shall not be infringed. The origin of the word “infringere”, in approximately 1535, meant to weaken, or break. The borders of ownership, shall not be trespassed, or weakened, by new insurance laws, ammo laws, registration laws, or any other mechanism, whether or not what department of government would like to regulate it. That's non-negotiable. Chuck Norris was writing about that today in the Conservative Underground.

The simple reason is the government can not regulate behavior, and bullets can, in a free society. Otherwise we will soon all be in chambers like the movie the Matrix, we might get a weird thought and hurt somebody? Today Mr. Obama got Oui Weed up and released restrictions on medical marijuana. That sounds like something Congress, not the President should do. In any case, marijuana has the ability to let people concentrate, or open their eyes to things they wouldn't normally think about?

Be careful what you wish for. You see, it ain't how you hold the mop, it's what's in the water? Trying to mop with sewer water? Speaking of sewer water, Prime Minister Gordan Brown claims we have 50 days to save Britain? Really? Oui Weed up are we? Isn't that why they banned that stuff, paranoia? Gordan, mankind invented a device to deal with climate change a long, long time ago. In fact, it was responsible for colonizing America, it is called a boat?

Frankly, I am insulted that others claim America needs to pay back carbon credits to the world after America has fed other nations for decades. Not to mention build the war machine necessary to counter Soviet and other communist expansion efforts which apparently they are now a part of? What gall, to suggest a thing?

I was listening to Rush Limbaugh's show today, and the warning from Lord Monckton about Gordan Brown's call for action on the UN climate change treaty within 50 days. No one is twisting the arms of Brits to stay on a sinking island, or whatever paranoid devil weed delusion they are suffering from. And why is it just now coming to the attention of Americans and the media that disgruntled Soviet communists took over Greenpeace?

I certainly had no idea. We knew they were all lunatics, of that there was no dispute. But now we know why? Speaking of lunatics, if President Obama wishes to sign a UN Treaty, it is our duty to inform the world, that America did not ask permission to leave Britain, it just did it. No surprise, Mr. Putin has threatened to remove his signature from international energy charters?

I assume there are a variety of ways that America could leave any international treaties that it may sign, after all, who knows, maybe that Kenya birth certificate could show up after all? What's cheaper, a birth certificate, or getting ripped off by foreigners? Oui Weed Up? Catchy phrase, eh? Lunatics, that's right, my Attention Definition Disorder is working in overdrive today.

There are of course the implications that an international treaty could also bring the American economy to a grinding halt, either externally, or internally. There are possibilities of blood less coups, legal disputes, improper procedures, or simply brute force behind the declaration of treaty withdrawal. Just the way they are trying to go about creating an international government proves that such a government will never exist, or has no need to exist? This is a psych war on people, just like they can't just show a sign to donate to animal or children shelters, no, they have to show us gruesome pictures?

Government psych war advisors in the media think we should see gruesome pictures of tortured animals, or starving children, but not those of terrorist acts? Oui Weed up again? The psych war on Rush Limbaugh continues? CNN did a report where they hired a psychiatrist to evaluate Rush Limbaugh, but then did not do a comparison on other comedians in the entertainment industry who talked about news issues? If the government is the bully, how else are you going to portray the government being a bully as a comedian? Credibility News Network is the last object I would associate with that organization?

There is an emerging common thread? Corruption in Iranian and Russian governments, with youth burning for freedom? The first thing that I would do, if the media decides to stop the freedom of the press, would be to boycott the press, stop paying for cable TV, Internet access, and basically go off the grid. And of course this falls back to private and public correspondence. In a closed government (for simplistic terms I say closed, not open to criticism) you ask if you can make a recommendation without getting molested. Then you make your recommendations, and then leave it be.

In a country like Russia, you could try to become a friend of Mr. Putin, although if he is truly a despot, that might not be an option, and you may simply stick to writing a letter, perhaps anonymously. In a world surrounded by yes men (better red than dead?) that is your only real option? That is why the American system has lasted such a long time, whatever goes up must come down? Except in America, we kept pushing up the best and the brightest, so that when there are mistakes, we can recover?

I think about the partnership between Mr. Weinberger, and Mr. Reagan. Quite a team. Bravo to reminding Rachel Maddow that Mr. Soros contributed millions to organizations after a smear attempt on Americans for Prosperity, who would likely have brought up the fact that the State of Nevada will be exempt from certain health care provision funding mechanisms in violation of all sort of ethical if not legal boundaries?

I'm checking some web sites before I wrap this up today. The Drudge Report, Russia eyes Chinese government system as model? Link to a NY Times article. It strikes me as odd, since the Chinese have a funny habit of fudging the numbers when they have to? Nothing wrong with skepticism? But of course that is politically incorrect now, with Mr. Obama complaining about Price Waterhouse and insurance company numbers related to proposed health care spending bills?

OMG! Chavez says Obama did not deserve the Nobel Peace Prize? Russia announces plans to develop major weapons with India, plans to include the use of drones on the battlefield to coordinate special forces and introduce a new tank that can fire almost double in range, to include guided missiles? All right, that's a breath of fresh air, let's go see what's in the news in China.

Oh, wonderful, temp agency beats college student for trying to screw up a contract working for Coca Cola by demanding that he be paid? If Americans are making $1 in ten minutes, and a man in China makes less than one dollar an hour (83 cents) what will happen if the dollar is destroyed, will the man in China make $1 yen in ten minutes, and the American worker will make $1 yen in one hour? Or will Americans simply keep their dollars and stop importing?

What do you say Professor Oui Weed Obama? Are you Oui Weed Up today? Surrounded by men that go Oui Oui? Trying to grab enough power so we have to ask to go Oui Oui? Just say Nein, be all you can be.

You hold very extreme views. Living as I do on that little island over there, Great Britain, I have my own views. The United States is the greatest global consumer of everything and also has a history of being the greatest global polluter too. Guess which way the atmosphere brings all your industrial and auto pollution....yes, largely to the atmosphere of the UK and Europe. Gordon Brown and his Government frequently use silly phrases for effect.

Just before our last General Election we had "3 days to save the NHS" (our health care system). Now he is using the same technique in order to knock heads together so that we can save this planet for another few years. The environment is very highly important to many countries. We only have the one planet (and not the 7 spare ones that current consumption and pollution rates would require). In our lifetime, we have seen so much destruction and loss of plants and animals through our thoughtless and wasteful use of resources, maybe in a large continent you cannot or chose not to see the environmental destruction we have created. The "throw away society" is deeply questioned across the whole of Europe by people.
Corporations continue to want us to buy "upgrades" every 3 years or so, but there is a rejection of this, largely and our media report on the environment all the time with programmes such as "Spring Watch" and "Autumn Watch". Fortunately, for the most part we are spared the shrill extremism of Fox News which is an encrypted channel; phew. It's bad enough that we have to suffer CNN and CNBC on satellite.

"Topic Drift" on this NG is understandable (and often surprisingly useful) but this thread is totally off topic from the beginning.

The NG is unmoderated so anybody can post whatever they want but if we start pursuing political topics the NG could easily be swamped.

Possibly this used to be true, back when the US actually manufactured anything. I think China is vying for -- or has actually captured -- the title of greatest global polluter.

The sun is going through a weird sunspot cycle right now and skip should be pretty good even during the day. 20 years ago I had a big outside whip and managed to talk to a guy in Jamaica who was really surprised to be talking to someone from California. If 2x5 watt ERP radios can do that the stations still on the air should come in strong.
I give this about 2 posts before someone goes off topic.

Second, I have to mention that those el-cheapo CFL's that Wal-mart is selling have one hell of an RFI output. I thought my radio had gone down when I thought to turn off all the CFL's in my house and it got listen-able. I have an oscilloscope monitoring the audio and the noise spikes are at 60 Hz and very consistent.

I think that if someone wanted to get into their radio it would be a small matter to put a line synced blank pulse when needed.

Anyone?

CFLs do not operate at 60 Hz.

No shit!!!
They do not have PFC front ends so there are spikes at 120 Hz if you want to get picky. Go to Wal-mart or any other store and you will see the $1 generic and the $5 GE branded ones are identical.
I scoped it with my trigger set to line and...duh...there were noise spikes every time the charging diodes conducted.
Those spikes contain some switching noise from the lamp controller.
What do you want from a country that owns our asses right about now?

Depending on your frequency of choice, you should be able to work that kind of distance with less than that power. I worked a guy in North Carolina from Chicago on 1 watt about 20 years ago, on 11 meters. Conditions, time of day all work for or against you.

But 10 and 11 meters can be amazing QRP bands.

I've noticed some, but not a LOT of noise from CFL's here.
Although, when the noise floor rises, I'm thinking it's from one of the neighbors' CFL's. My own are pretty quiet.

I bought mine in bulk from HeartlandAmerica.com. The brand is Green/Shine, made in China and the cost was a little less than $2/ea in a variety of wattages and lumen outputs. Fairly quiet. Two in the bathroom downstairs create enough noise that I can't use a radio there, but they don't seem to radiate enough to get into radios elsewhere in the building.

But the simple solution is an antenna in a quiet part of the property, well grounded with a well grounded transmission line.

Interesting thought. I've had some pretty decent results with some noise blankers, depending on the receiver. But a blank pulse, not tried that.

I'll give that a look.

A late thought, here....have you put a bit of capacitance across the lamp? I had a torchiere in the studio that was creating some enormous spikes on the line, and was getting back into the audio.
Eventually, I pulled the SCR fader out. But a quick short term solution was to put a capacitor across the line. Put an orange drop in a 3 to 2 line adaptor, and plugged it into the power strip.
Quieted things right down. Even elimated spikes that were getting into my AM receiver.

Cheap solution. Good results.

I don't think I could have done that much better except on a narrow band Morse code, and when have you ever seen Morse code and CB? Either way, the guy in Jamaica and I were pretty blown away.

I had some very noisy ones and tossed them so now my house is quiet but the neighbors use them for night lights and CFL's have destroyed my noise floor. I can still get some of the channels broadcasting in English but if I am using the crystal filter I can't make out a woman's voice.

I have bought from Heartland and their stuff is pretty good. 90% is made in China so I'm not going to kid myself on that one. They seem to always have good deals.

The brand is

The obvious solution, to me, would be for the F.C.C. to get off their HDTV campaign to force us all to buy Chinese flat screens and do their jobs regarding 'noise pollution'.

Not enough property at this house so I climbed a few trees and ran the wire for the antenna through them. Total Rube Goldberg but it works.

I was hoping not to be the token inventor here but the noise pulse shows up on my scope (4 channel x 100MHz Tektronix) and if I just had a reference to the 60 cycle I could set up a few one shots to cut the beginning to the other end of the noise pulse. Kind of a notch filter for noise, not adjacent channel. Traditional noise blankers have to see the beginning of the pulse and guesstimate the end of the pulse so some noise does get through.

I've thought of a lot of things but the capacitor needs someplace for me to put it. I was hoping the F.C.C. would have been bright enough to regulate a noise maximum but no, we get HDTV during a Depression.

I had a torchiere in the studio that was creating some enormous

SCR's are terrible for noise. I had one on a filament lamp for the bedroom ceiling and as I dialed the bright up and down I could hear the change in the radio.

But a quick short term solution was to put a

Sounds good for a few fixes but I don't want to do it for every bulb in the house. Someone should make a noise reduction socket piece that the CFL would plug into. I'm thinking 2 inductors and 2 capacitors.

Thanks for the note about this interesting moment for SW radio reception. I will make a special note to use SW this week.

I used to listen frequently in the days before satellite but as a radio anorak, it will be enjoyable tuning in currently.
Living outside the USA, as most of the planet does, I cannot comment on equipment in Walmart, but I bought a neat and cheap and green small SW set on the net last year. I use recycled batteries in it, charged from a solar charger and it also comes with a light and more importantly a winding crank so that you can have plenty of listening time simply by turning the handle a few times. The brand is 'Eton' and I guess it is made in China, but my carbon footprint in using it must be near to zero. Radio pleasure with a care for the environment too; can't be bad!

Well, you didn't choose your words too carefully.

You said "...being the greatest polluter" (present tense)

Possibly your meaning would have been clearer if you said "...has a history of having been the greatest polluter." (past tense), giving a tip of the hat to China's current status.

In any event, have a nice day! :-)

Chinese or not it sounds like a good deal. I have and old maritime RDF radio (1974) and it will run off of a 5" diameter solar cell I have from a solar powered sidewalk light. It puts out about 6 volts at 100 ma and runs the radio just fine. For night time use it sucks up 4 D cells.
I just had the Hammarlund fired up and the CB crowd is alive and well. The RME-DB20 gives me about 20 dB of gain at the CB band. It's out there but some hunting is needed.

From:

http://www.radiotalkingpoints.com/articles/2009_radiotalkingpoints_article_0046_Oct_20_OuiWeedUp.html

Revised Oct 20th, 2009

Oui is a French word that means yes. Nein is a German word that means No. The rights of the People, not the States, to bear arms, shall not be infringed. The origin of the word “infringere”, in approximately 1535, meant to weaken, or break. The borders of ownership, shall not be trespassed, or weakened, by new insurance laws, ammo laws, registration laws, or any other mechanism, whether or not what department of government would like to regulate it. That's non-negotiable. Chuck Norris was writing about that today in the Conservative Underground.

The simple reason is the government can not regulate behavior, and bullets can, in a free society. In a free society, where criminals take it upon themselves the opportunity to harm you no matter what the government says or does, avail themselves the chance to be hit with a supersonic projectile designed to usher them into a new world is what keeps America from going into chaos?

Now I am talking of course about law abiding citizens, who do not use fire arms unless absolutely necessary. Otherwise we will soon all be in chambers like the movie the Matrix, we might get a weird thought and hurt somebody? Monday Mr. Obama got Oui Weed up, announcing released restrictions on medical marijuana? That sounds like something Congress, not the President should do. In any case, marijuana has the ability to let people concentrate, or open their eyes to things they wouldn't normally think about?

Be careful what you wish for. You see, it ain't how you hold the mop, it's what's in the water? Trying to mop with sewer water? Speaking of rising oceans of sewer water, Prime Minister Gordan Brown claims we have 50 days to save Britain? Really? Oui Weed up are we? Isn't that why they banned that stuff, paranoia? Gordan, mankind invented a device to deal with climate change a long, long time ago. In fact, it was responsible for colonizing America, it is called a boat?

Frankly, I am insulted that others claim America needs to pay back carbon credits to the world after America has fed other nations for decades. Not to mention build the war machine necessary to counter Soviet and other communist expansion efforts which apparently they are now a part of? What gall, to suggest a thing?

Ever have a bee sting? Claiming that America has to pay back carbon credits is a bee sting. You never forget a bee sting by the way. Dropping a sludge hammer on my foot is the announcement that climate change requires that we trade carbon credits at all. Which is why I lost my temper yesterday and projected that anger by comparing certain human beings to certain parts of donkeys?

Yes, I am still mad today, I'm writing am I not? These politicians bother me when they claim that we will have a shortage of resources, as though they know what everyone is going to do in the next 30 days? Never mind all the patent applications waiting to go through the system, or the business owners and engineers waiting to turn in patent applications for desalination plants, new power plants, construction plans, etc?

Oui Weed Up today? Watching a "senior economist" on CSPAN who doesn't look a day over 40 testifying to people? I spent my whole life admiring the British government, yet within the last year, the shroud of who they have become has finally fallen? Now it appears the Russians are more credible than the British? What is more incredible is that I have to consider the possibility?

Here's my theory, after WWII, the Americans and the Russians could not learn how to trust each other, and the Russians of course had their Stalin and communist plans. That missing trust could have prevented not only the cold war, but communism from spreading in Russia? That's my theory, and one day I will ponder it some more. I simply don't have time today about things that could have changed but did not.

Today it is important to listen and learn from Russia what page they are on, and prevent military spending that is fueled by excessive fear mongering. Fears are real of course when 10,000 men today have the power of 100,000 WII troops. While researching this article I visited some Russian web sites, and they use a lot of different web sites to serve up web pages, which can mean a number of different things. I must share with you, that if you are gaging your economy by the price of hookers, is it a mistake to give you too much credibility?

I was listening to Rush Limbaugh's show yesterday (10/19/09), and the warning from Lord Monckton about Gordan Brown's call for action on the UN climate change treaty within 50 days. No one is twisting the arms of Brits to stay on a sinking island, or whatever paranoid devil weed delusion they are suffering from. And why is it just now coming to the attention of Americans and the media that disgruntled Soviet communists took over Greenpeace?

I certainly had no idea. We knew they were all lunatics, of that there was no dispute. But now we know why? Speaking of lunatics, if President Obama wishes to sign a UN Treaty, it is our duty to inform the world, that America did not ask permission to leave Britain, it just did it. No surprise, Mr. Putin has threatened to remove his signature from international energy charters?

I assume there are a variety of ways that America could leave any international treaties that it may sign, after all, who knows, maybe that Kenya birth certificate could show up after all? What's cheaper, a birth certificate, or getting ripped off by foreigners? Oui Weed Up? Catchy phrase, eh? Lunatics, that's right, my Attention Definition Disorder is working in overdrive today.

There are of course the implications that an international treaty could also bring the American economy to a grinding halt, either externally, or internally. There are possibilities of blood less coups, legal disputes, improper procedures, or simply brute force behind the declaration of treaty withdrawal. Just the way they are trying to go about creating an international government proves that such a government will never exist, or has no need to exist? This is a psych war on people, just like they can't just show a sign to donate to animal or children shelters, no, they have to show us gruesome pictures?

Government psych war advisors in the media think we should see gruesome pictures of tortured animals, or starving children, but not those of terrorist acts? Oui Weed up again? The psych war on Rush Limbaugh continues? CNN did a report where they hired a psychiatrist to evaluate Rush Limbaugh, but then did not do a comparison on other comedians in the entertainment industry who talked about news issues? If the government is the bully, how else are you going to portray the government being a bully as a comedian? Credibility News Network is the last object I would associate with that organization?

You know what CNN? If I wanted to listen to a neutered drone with no emotion, I would download video conversions of CSPAN, or listen to National Public Rip Off radio when ever they are not playing music that would make a monkey vomit. I don't want just a bully on the radio, I want a raging bull, I want a Gorilla of truth, I want to feel machismo on the radio. I want to hear the shattering glass of liberal egg shell minds on the radio?

There is an emerging common thread? Corruption in Iranian and Russian governments, with youth burning for freedom? Corruption is a broad word, used even to describe situations that lack opportunities? Or are designed to prevent opportunities of freedom? Many people in the United States are saying that corruption is not limited to one government, but is spread across several states and continents?

What would you do, if the media decides to stop the freedom of the press, no more bullies of truth? Would you boycott the press, stop paying for cable TV, Internet access, and basically go off the grid? This falls back to private and public correspondence? In a closed government (for simplistic terms I say closed, not open to criticism) you ask if you can make a recommendation without getting molested.

Then you make your recommendations, and then leave it be?

In a country like Russia, you could try to become a friend of Mr. Putin, although if he is truly a despot, that might not be an option, and you may simply stick to writing a letter, perhaps anonymously? In a world surrounded by yes men (better red than dead?) that is your only real option? Why would you want to live in a world of censorship, or in a world where you might be embarrassed by an idea?

Better free than need. Let me repeat that. Better free than need. Freedom demands patience? That is why the American system has lasted such a long time, whatever goes up must come down? Except in America, we kept pushing up the best and the brightest, so that when there are mistakes, we can recover?

I think about the partnership between Mr. Weinberger, and Mr. Reagan. Quite a team. Bravo to reminding Rachel Maddow that Mr. Soros contributed millions to organizations after a smear attempt on Americans for Prosperity, who would likely have brought up the fact that the State of Nevada will be exempt from certain health care provision funding mechanisms in violation of all sort of ethical if not legal boundaries?

The Drudge Report, Russia eyes Chinese government system as model? After they concluded the price of hookers will go down? LOL. Just kidding. It looks like we will have to figure out what they are talking about, because I am not so sure I understand their system, other than the fact that they are ruthless on some issues.

I would like to see economic reform that allows China and all nations to realize that abortion is not necessary in a functioning economy. I would like to see more freedoms that are reasonable and reform prison systems around the world, not just in China. And while I hold out that hope, I actually think one day I can contribute to that.

Today however, Liberals would be miserable under such a system? If poor, uneducated black voters find out they traded being able to earn one dollar in ten minutes, to earning one dollar, in an hour and a half if the dollar was destroyed and replaced with a new currency, by the political power grab of the Democratic Party, do you think they will be mad? Will they be savages? Did you hear Michael Savage today? Breaking glass ceilings, didn't catch the whole show, but a thumbs up, and a thank you?

It strikes me as odd wanting to adopt a Chinese system, because on a couple of occasions I have noticed reports of fudged numbers? What about economic reports distorted by state ownership issues? The Chinese have a funny habit of fudging the numbers in the 1970s when they had to? So do other countries? They also put to death those found guilty of corruption, or is that meant to make sure your numbers are right when you report them? Nothing wrong with skepticism? Or is that politically incorrect now, with Mr. Obama complaining about Price

Waterhouse and insurance company numbers related to proposed health care spending bills?

OMG! Chavez says Obama did not deserve the Nobel Peace Prize? Russia announces plans to develop major weapons with India, plans to include the use of drones on the battlefield to coordinate special forces and introduce a new tank that can fire almost double in range, to include guided missiles? All right, that's a breath of fresh air, let's go see what's in the news in China?

Oh, wonderful, temp agency beats college student for trying to screw up a contract working for Coca Cola by demanding that he be paid? If Americans are making $1 in ten minutes, and a man in China makes less than one dollar an hour (83 cents) what will happen if the dollar is destroyed, will the man in China make $1 yen in ten minutes, and the American worker will make $1 yen in one hour? Or will Americans simply keep their dollars and stop importing?

What do you say Professor Oui Weed Obama? Are you Oui Weed Up today? Surrounded by men that go Oui Oui? Trying to grab enough power so we have to ask to go Oui Oui? Just say Nein, be all you can be? Better Free than Need. So Time Magazine will write an article about President Obama that explains excessive government regulation is not communism?

Quote: He was standing in the hole waiting for something to develop....and WHAP! He got developed? (John Earl Maddon, unrelated conversational quote, a scenario however that applied to a football player who thought he knew what was going on in the game, and got schooled, seemed like an appropriate metaphoric epiphany at this point in the conversation?)

Resistance if futile, you must comply.......with the truth!

Can you smell el el el el el el el el el .........what the Rock of Truth, who has the smartest eyebrow in the Universe, and the whitest teeth known to man, is ..........cooking?

Being that this is the most exciting, most entertaining, fact finding, brain busting, fun loving, liberal egg shell mind crunching, invincible smacketh downeth erectus among us, you can't see the truth coming, but you know it is anyway, sonic boom of Conservatism, and, most powerful keyboard in the world,

Do you feel lucky?

Proof positive was confirmed after Whoopie Goldberg confirmed she was terrified by watching Tom Delay shaking and baking on Dance with the Stars?

The lamentation of all Muslim women in the Middle East is sure to follow upon the release of this weapon of mass destruction?

Well how else to explain his behavior? Friendly Fire?

I don't know where you are but the waves around here are full of CB chat. Some people have literally taken over a channel and have the base station in the kitchen so they can do stuff and chat. Whole bunch of yakking with no point of reference in sight. CB isn't dead, it just went underground, so to speak. The other night I got S-meter readings from about 1 (mostly noise) to pegged so hard I thought it might break. I think it is a group that is slightly too far for free calls.
It was like a red neck conference call, a hoot.

2251. What is the abridgement of Speech?

Freedom of Speech?

Draft, Oct 21, 2009

To abridge? By definition, to reduce in scope, deprive, shorten in duration, shorten in extent.

To distract? To turn aside, to draw or direct one's attention.

Neutrality? Refusal to take part in a war between other powers.

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution: Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The subject today is the freedom of speech, and the rumors of administrators within the United States Government to control the networks of communication. By interfering with the content of free speech, by requiring the inclusion of other ideas, I argue that you are distracting, and shortening the scope and duration of the conversation at hand regarding whatever speech is subjected to modification, control, or limiting scope of the Government.

For unlike the internet, which has the capacity to hold endless volumes of materials and ideas, the human mind is limited to the capacity of short term memory, which can be overwhelmed easily, not by the content, but simply by the volume of material. Hence, the requirement of the 1st Amendment to the United States Constitution, that the Government not interfere with the speech of either individuals or the press. I argue that the requirement that publishers or speakers include alternative viewpoints amounts to the reduction in scope, and duration, of the speech affected.

Indeed this concept is proven by the lengthy time involved with the transfer of information between the teacher and student(s) in schools, which can take several years in a highly controlled setting, let alone the spur of the moment situations that may lend themselves to the spontaneous inspiration of ideas. While this straight forward observation is obvious that the inclusion of alternative viewpoints in a conversation, whatever they may be, are obvious abridgment(s) of speech, there is also the final test, petition of the Government for a redress of grievances.

Petition of the redress of grievances does not always occur within a finite moment of time, but may be developed through several minds over the exchange of correspondence or speech that may indeed span several days, and even months. As such ideas are developed, or such opinions formed, it is of at least equal and even more abridgment that the required insertion of alternative viewpoints may distract, shorten, or deprive focus of, or about the concentration of subjects of interests, grievances, and even solutions to problems.

With this talk of Internet neutrality, I find it odd that the word that defines the absence in participation of a war, or a conflict of competing interests, is to be used therefore as an actual tool to abridge the free speech of which they claim it is to defend? Pray tell, you will not win that argument in my presence.

Since President Obama braggs about the challenge of debate, when will he challenge the black youth of the United States to listen to the Rush Limbaugh show for six weeks? Will Rush put one hour a day, on the free side of his web site if they agree to this? Do you want a challenge, do you want a virtual steel cage match where you must battle each other with no way out unless one side can declare victory? Or are you just firing up the banana peels as usual?

Resistance if futile, you must comply.......with the truth!

When I lived in St Louis, there were a couple of guys with base stations, who pretty much signed on and parked on a channel, chatting all night. Got to be a fairly common occurrence. Pissed off a guy in St Charles, who had an old Collins he'd brought up to 11 Meters, and put a Yagi up on top of a huge tower out behind his house. He had an EchoPlex in his audio chain, and apparently a mixer with several mic and line level sources. He was moderately entertaining for about 5 minutes, and then got very tiresome, very quickly. It took about 2 years for someone to finally take him out. And it wasn't FCC. They were clamping down elsewhere in the area. A couple of local operators found his base, and took his tower down for him. He was removed from the evironment shortly thereafter.

The bands were VERY quiet for the longest time. And then there was a revival after 'Convoy' came out. Truckers running 500 watt linears. The largest I heard of was one guy claiming a kilowatt. Talk about your redneck conference call.

I sold my walkies shortly thereafter. And moved into other things.

Are you posting from a funny farm? I found the CD with the kids pictures ( the ones I took ) and in every photo they are smiling. I taught my grandson how to climb too. I don't know why every group has to have at least one or two. I might actually put some of the pictures on it so you can see a lot of smiling kids, including my grandson.
There is one picture of us rolling over a big wooden (what it was.??) piece. We found that working as a team all those little muscles could literally move boulders.
BTW, all of them have IQ's over 110-115. Two I estimate at 130 or more.

It sounds as if he were personally messing up the 10 meter band. Some CBers had 'sliders' so they could go out of band. One screwed up, got drunk, slid down to a government frequency and told them to get off his channel. They found him within 24 hours and confiscated all his electronic stuff.

Mostly they use them to alert other drivers of a cop in the bush waiting to snag someone.
Some of the big rig drivers went 80 MPH. I don't know what a semi would do for an actual top speed. Might even be over 100 MPH.

I'll turn mine on every now and then. CB is very much alive and well all over the Cinti./N.Kentucky area. We have a group known as the "Eastgate Locals"....group of young adults and older fellas that drive around the Eastgate area talking mobile and then they may get together on the weekends and go to Bob Evans or another restaurant in the area.

During the winter months or when the snow or freezing rain are pelting the area, I'll keep it on channel nineteen and give the drivers a heads up on the road conditions or give them a hand navigating some of these country roads.

Once the winter months end, the base goes off.

Does your house have stucco walls? Do you have an outside antenna?
Virtually nothing below 1 gHz gets through my walls. FM, HF, etc. all barely work inside and you can hear all manner of hash and whine from Audio through UHF. My outside antennas are stone quiet.

There is no over the air TV here. Everyone has cable and nobody

Some of the big Kenworths will do 120 without breathing hard.

I was on a trip through Missouri about 12 years ago, and I had my Cobra with me. I heard a trucker with a big signal talking about a crash involving a bridge and an 18 wheeler nearly 75 miles ahead of me. Traffic was backed up for 30 miles and growing. I checked my map, and made a detour. Added easily 25 miles to my trip, but saved me a lot of grief. I saw on the news in Little Rock that night that the bridge had been severely compromised, and both roads had been closed by the authorities.

Were it not for that trucker I would have been stuck in that traffic for half a day before I could have turned around.

Most of the time, yeah, they're watching for patrol cars.
Occasionally, they have important news.

Occasionally.

There used to be some dudes in the Jackson area who used to run all over the CB channels (except for that certain channel the 18 wheeler truck drivers mostly use) all day long and half the night long up to about 10:00 PM with their nonsense crap.One time I dug out two of my old CB radios I don't care all that much about.I turned them on and I raked the antennas up and down agains't each other.I heard one of those dudes holler, Yeooooooooooowwww,,,,,,,,, What's the revenue model? Is the team going to pay for it like an

What programming will be so compelling that (let's say) 10,000 Raiders

I have serious doubts as to the viability of such a venture. The games are already carried on TV and radio, including pre and post game shows. I really can't feature anyone paying a bunch of extra money for yet another radio to hear pretty much what they already get on their $40 boom box they've had for years.

You're thinking about "funny" channels. A "slider" was a fairly narrow (typically between 10 and 25 KHz) bandspread that allowed the CB to be tuned between channels (as between channel 3 and channel 4, channel 7 and channel 8, etc.) and/or to "follow" a QSO in SSB mode, where the signal on the other end was not spot on channel.

Where can I buy a ''slider''? How would I hook it up?

Anyhoo, the very next day, a van with several antennas on it pulled up in front of my house.A dude slowly stepped out of his van and he slowly walked to my front door and he knocked on my door.I pretended I wasen't at home.He slowly walked back to his van and he drove away.

"In addition, local stations, having already developed expensive secondary programming for their HD stations that nobody listens to, are excited to have another outlet for that programming. They see this as a great salvation from the HD experience, because they've already invested that money, and everything that they're putting on their secondary [HD] channels, that their audience isn't able to hear either because of the antenna problems with HD, their location, or because they don't want to invest in HD radio," said Sopato. All of those secondary streams are on the web and on this radio. Now, they don't have to tell their audience, 'go get an HD Radio.'"

I hope it is better than the stuff I could find last night.
The evangelical stations drive me nuts but they are still putting out the word, their version at least. The first station I ever tuned in was HCJB, the voice of the Andes. It was about an S-7 every night.

Patrol cars are important news to truckers whose income depends on a good driving record.
I got stuck about 15 years ago where there were no cell towers, pay phones, or anything else. I got on my CB and asked for help and one guy called a tow truck for me. These days no CB and a breakdown in the middle of nowhere can be a real major pain. I can get CB signals without towers, thank you.

Except with the noise level on the band, it takes way too illegal a

Now that is believable. Yakking on the CB is good for staying awake on a long haul trip. If I am going to share the road with semi rigs I want the drivers awake.

I ran a TV shop in 1982 and had to refuse 'sliders' for the sake of my FCC license but some of them had rigs with VCO's in them so they could go up or down about 2 MHz. Never underestimate the creativity of a trucker.

Dude,
Just be glad they weren't in the neighborhood when you did your little stunt. I got a visit from the FBI in 1972 for making a portable ship to shore radio in a suitcase for somebody. He said it was for his office since he had a rental fleet and then the idiot yaks it up all over Santa Clara valley. He named me and I got the pink warning slip.
The FBI guys were gorillas in $3,000 suits, and zero sense of humor.

That too. I refuse to buy a new car where I have to pay $10 a month just to listen to music via satellite. They also want to install 'black boxes' in cars to analyze crash data. Guess what, that little box can record how fast you drive and report to the police and you get a ticket in the mail. It could just be the black box reporting you driving 85 on the freeway or being in the vicinity of a crime. They can then establish where you were parked and for how long.

I got a visit from the local FCC field office (Portland, OR) in 1974. I had been running an FM pirate station for nearly a year. They asked politely if they could come in, and I let them. They looked at my broadcast studio, and asked "do you have a microphone?." I said yes, and they told me "open it, get on the air and tell your listeners you are leaving the air by order of the FCC." I did so, and they told me "Now, shut it off. AND LEAVE IT OFF!" Amazingly, they did not confiscate my transmitter, antenna, audio equipment, etc., nor even my FCC 3rd Class Radiotelephone Operator Permit with broadcast endorsement, which was pinned to the window sill above my turntables..

About 3 weeks later I got a nice letter from Gettysburg, PA telling me that if I got busted again I could get 2 years at Club Fed and/or a $20,000 fine. I stayed off the air (for a while... ) A few years later, I was running a 250 watte AM pirate right in the city of Portland. :)

You were lucky. That guy who got drunk and told the government guys to get off 'his' channel had everything confiscated, right up to his thousand watt transmitter. He had about $5,000 worth of CB stuff and they searched his house and took it all. By all my dealings with them you should have been out of some gear.

That does sound more typical for them.

I found an arcing noise making telephone pole with my marine RDF in about 5 minutes so I could call the power company and have them fix it.

Satellite radio is an option in new cars, not mandatory. They all still have good old fashioned AM/FM radios in them (even when they do have satellite).

President Obama and "the other side of Barack's brain," Valerie Jarrett -- whose stepfather coincidentally maintained close ties with the President's adolescent mentor and Communist, Frank Marshall Davis -- handpicked the following bureaucrats and placed them in Yep, know it well. Got a swag of them on a compilation CD set of the 60's stuff. Play them now and again when I'm feeling a trifle nostalgic... Lots of funny stuff was written back then.

2305. Hey Out-of-Control radio insiders - HD radio just isn’t needed or wanted.

The problem with most digital radio proponents is that in their zeal for hd radio they seem to willfully forget that radio is, and should be, consumer driven. You can always tell the proponents with their "screw you" attitude when challenged. Fact is, hd radio doesn’t sell. Consumers have spoken this for 7 long years but that doesn’t seem to deter the proponents. They come up with all kinds of excuses - not enough power, not enough receivers, not enough stations converted, consumers need to be "educated" and the list goes on and on. Simple fact here - except for a few out-of-control radio insiders HD radio just isn’t needed or wanted. Time to stop the excuses and the force-feeding tactics and move on.

And this is different from what the GOP did?
Killing millions for profit and then taking it out of the country?
Who's the real destroyer of our free country?

The dems are cleaning out the greedy trash that is destroying capitalism and our way of life. All the while the "GOP Hypicritaical do-nothing party of NO" sits by with the Taliban and Al-qaeda to destroy america.

Someday, once you have your nice home under a bridge while corporate big

Obama is too busy fighting Fox news to bother with the Taliban or Al-Queda.

I found SW signals very stable and strong and caught news from China that we are currently passing through outer elements of Haylley's Comet around this time 22nd to 29th October and that apparently 23,00 hours was mentioned as being a good time to enjoy the view. Apparently according to Chinese SW, the Southern Hemisphere will see more of a show than the Northern. It was a nice find from dial twiddling and the signal from Romania was also strong but the programme about Romanian teenagers didn't grab my interest. I found a lot of Spanish stations too also with solidly stable signals. All of this in a 15 minute time slot. I will listen in more this week, I agree that the signal strengths and stability were well up on my expectations.

"HD Radio Initiatives: Today's New Opportunities"

"Struble began the session by citing the latest HD radio sales and broadcaster data. He noted that while sales of HD Radios are sharply increasing, especially with the new portable Best Buy Insignia and Zune HD models, the economy and declining station revenues have slowed adoption a bit on the broadcaster side. We're selling millions, but we need to be selling in the tens of millions."

http://tinyurl.com/yjpsuvz

"Struble: Radio Is the Last Analog Medium Standing"

"Insignia HD – I think this will be a nice little interim step for jogging or working out. It proves the viability [of the technology] and hopefully we'll get sales; but no, this is not going to sell in the hundreds of thousands... Radio alone – the sad reality of where it is – as a standalone device, it just doesn't exist anymore as a category. Nobody goes into Best Buy and says 'Where's the radio department?'"

10 Ways of Developing Love for Allah

Adapted from Shaykh Ibn Qayyims (rah) Madarij-us-Saalikeen

Shaykh Ibn al-Qayyim (rah) says: The reason which cause mahabbah (love) of Allaah to develop, are ten:

First: Reciting the Quraan, reflecting and understanding its meaning and its intent.

Second: Drawing closer to Allaah the Most High through optional deeds, after fulfilling the obligatory duties.

Third: Being continuous in the dhikr (remembrance) of Allaah, with the tongue, the heart and the limbs under all circumstances. The more continuant the dhikr, the more muhabbah develops and intensifies.

Fourth: Giving precedence to what Allaah loves over personal loves, when being overcome by desires.

Fifth: Contemplating and deliberating over the Names and Attributes of Allaah.

Sixth: Recognizing and remembering the favors and bounties of Allaah both manifest and hidden.

Seventh: To be humble and submissive before Allaah and this is the greatest matter.

Eighth: To be in seclusion reciting the Quraan, during that time in which Allaah descends to the lowest heaven (which is the last third of every night), finishing this recitation with seeking Allaahs forgiveness and repenting to Him.

Ninth: To sit in the gatherings of the true and sincere lovers of Allaah, reaping the fruits of their speech, and not to speak except if there is benefit in it and that you know that such talk will increase you in goodness and that it will benefit others as well.

Tenth: To stay clear of all those causes which distances the heart from Allaah the Mighty and Majestic.

So these are the ten reasons which cause the person to develop true love for Allaah and to reach the rank of al-muhabbah, by which he reaches his Beloved.

I guess we'll see. As a game-day NFL employee, who attends all the home games of a local team, I see maybe 100 fans who look rabid enough to buy a $100 radio to listen to 24/7 home-team content. I can't think of any advertisers who'll pay for a buy to reach 100 fans.

Let's check back in again in 2015...

2359. Saif Durbar: Conducting Housing Experiments in Saudi Arabia!

BOVIS LEND LEASE, the construction group, has teamed up with the British architect behind London's "erotic gherkin" office skyscraper on a $13 billion (£7.4 billion) plan to build 750,000 new homes in Saudi Arabia.

The pair are working with Saudi Construction Group, a new company backed by some of the Kingdom's richest businessmen, to develop a huge site about three miles outside the capital, Riyadh. The backers plan to float the group – which could be worth about £1 billion – in London or Riyadh by the middle of next year.

The company is the brainchild of Saifee Durbar, a broker to Saudi billionaires investing in Europe, Paul Bloomfield, the veteran property dealmaker, and Sheikh Faisal al-Sharif, chairman of DGI, a company that is researching a $2 billion (£1.1 billion) petrochemicals plant in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi Construction Group is designed to cash in on the Saudi Government's plans to provide a home for every Saudi citizen. The Saudi Government believes that there is a need for between three and four million new homes over the next ten to fifteen years.

The oil-rich country currently houses more than 26 million people but is one of the world's fastest-growing countries.

Foster & Partners, the architect behind Swiss Re's landmark office building near the Tower of London, dubbed the "erotic gherkin" will create a master-plan for the huge housing settlement. The site totals seven million square metres and will accommodate about 750,000 new homes.

Bovis Lend Lease will be the lead contractor for the project, which will cost between $6 billion and $7 billion and will be worth between $10 billion and $13 billion when complete.

Foster & Partners is keen to create a ground-breaking development that provides new high standards of modern living in Saudi Arabia.

Foster & Partners has created some of the world's most impressive modern architecture, including the glass dome over Berlin's Reichstag, Hong Kong's airport and Bilbao's new Metro. Nigel Hugill, the former managing director of Chelsfield, the property company formed by Elliott Bernerd, was instrumental in getting Bovis Lend Lease involved with the Saudi housing project.

Saif Durbar, who helped to set up the Saudi Construction Group, is a low-profile Middle Eastern businessman who has helped to fund a string of property development projects in Britain and mainland Europe, including Palm Beach, a casino and hotel complex outside Cannes. He lost a $1 billion fortune in 1995 on a bond deal that went wrong.

http://businessdistress.wordpress.com/2009/08/21/saifee-durbar-case-study-in-recovery/

He is also planning to build a railway linking Cameroon and Sudan. This will enhance African self-sufficiency as it will use minerals and other raw materials from the Central African Republic. The eastern terminus in Sudan will also provide a source of aid for the people in Darfur.

You're too stupid to understand what you read.

Your job is gone because of your socialist liberal "Progressive" teachers union wants you to learn about how your ancestors killed all those indians. And how the Chinese man was repressed by European invaders. And How the natives of S.America were killed by the spanish invaders. And how the muslims are just getting even for the Crusades where if you knew truth about history you would know the Crusades was in response to slaughter of europeans by muslim invaders. Forget about science, math - that is the Communist agenda. THAT IS YOUR IDIOT AGENDA!

Tsk tsk, your children are dumber than you. Teach them how to use a mop really well.

"Big Boss Man"
Single by Jimmy Reed Released 1961
Format 7" 45rpm
Genre Blues
Label Vee-Jay Records
Writer(s) Luther Dixon, Al Smith
This article is about the song. For other uses, see Big Boss Man.

"Big Boss Man" is a popular blues song written by Luther Dixon and Al Smith in 1960. It was released by Jimmy Reed in 1960 on Vee-Jay LP Found Love, the year after issued as a 45. It also has a crossover appeal, having been covered by many country and rock artists.

Reed's recordings of "Big Boss Man" and "Bright Lights, Big City" were both voted onto the list of The Rock and Roll Hall of Fame's 500 Songs that Shaped Rock and Roll. Reed's wife, Mama Reed, appears as an uncredited background singer on both of these songs.

Elvis Presley recorded a version of the song on September 10, 1967. It was released on a single the same month, backed with "You Don't Know Me", and reached #38 on the Billboard Hot 100 chart. It was then used in the "Road Medley" of his '68 Comeback Special and then performed on numerous occasions in his 1970s performances.

The song has also been covered by many other artists,[1] including Frank Frost, The Animals, Big Jack Johnson, Koko Taylor, Alan Price, Jerry Lee Lewis, Charlie Rich, Conway Twitty, The Syndicate of Sound, John Hammond, Bobby Gentry, Nancy Sinatra, The Grateful Dead, The Who, Steve Miller, The Pretty Things, David Bowie, The Kentucky Headhunters, The Radiators and Holly Golightly.

The song, as performed by reggae artist, Junior Reid, was featured in the film Office Space.

SB PROP ARL ARLP043
ARLP043 Propagation de K7RA

A tiny cycle 24 sunspot group numbered 1028 emerged briefly on Tuesday, October 20, then was gone. This is another brief phantom sunspot, teasing us with hints of the expected increase in activity that never seems to manifest. Of course the silver lining in the low solar activity is low geomagnetic activity. While folks in Alaska miss dramatic aurora, HF hams in the northern latitudes can enjoy the bands without all the disruption that comes with geomagnetic storms.

A couple of coronal holes are spewing enough plasma to activate some aurora, but remember that most of the photos you see of beautiful displays in the sky are actually very long exposures taken from a rock-steady tripod mount. Many times the unaided eye cannot perceive the more dramatic details. As a result of solar wind from coronal holes, geomagnetic indices rose yesterday, on Thursday, with planetary A index at 14, mid-latitude A index as measured in Virginia at 12, and the College A index at Fairbanks, Alaska way up to 25.

The College A index has been quiet for a long time, and the last time the index was nearly this high was on August 30, 2009 at 24.
Prior College A index readings higher than Thursday's were July 22, 2009 at 27, February 4, 2009 at 36, December 6, 2008 at 26, and November 8, 2008 at 30.

You can look back at daily geomagnetic and solar indices from 1994 to the present at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpmenu/indices/old_indices.html.
In fact, it is instructive when bemoaning the present lack of solar activity to reflect on times when there was so much geomagnetic activity, that HF propagation was difficult. At http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpdir/indices/old_indices/1994_DGD.txt see 1994 College and Planetary A index numbers, and how there were extended periods of heightened activity. In fact, you can see stretches for weeks at a time when there are only spotty records of the College A and K index, and I seem to recall that during these times their instruments were knocked out of service by energy from geomagnetic storms concentrated in polar regions.

The activity on Thursday was not predicted by USAF and NOAA in their daily 45-day forecast at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpmenu/forecasts/45DF.html. In the days prior to Thursday (check October 20 and 21) they were still expecting a Planetary A index of 5 for Thursday. Then in the October 22 prediction they show a Planetary A index of 8 for October 23-25, the weekend for the CQ World Wide SSB DX Contest.

Geophysical Institute Prague has a little more detailed forecast for the contest weekend. They expect quiet conditions for October 23, quiet to unsettled October 24, unsettled on October 25, and back to quiet for October 26-29. OK1HH of the Czech Propagation Interest Group expects a bit higher activity, with quiet conditions for October 23, and unsettled to active geomagnetic conditions for October 24-25.

Scott Craig, WA4TTK has an updated data file for his Solar Data Plotting Utility. This is useful if you are not yet running the program and collecting the data. The data can be updated semi-automatically each week from this bulletin, and manually as well. The new data file has daily solar flux and sunspot numbers from January 1, 1989 through October 7, 2009. Download it for free at http://www.craigcentral.com/sol.asp. This is a good way to visually realize the difference between the previous solar minimum and this extended quiet period we are in.

Brian Webb, KD6NRP of Ventura County, California notes that even with no sunspot activity, using low power and a simple antenna he hears and works many stations overseas on 17 meters. On October 19 at 1556z he worked PA3HP on PSK on 17 meters, after answering his CQ. Brian's antenna was a horizontal delta loop, about 50 feet on each side, and fed with 300 ohm twinlead and 100 watts. I noted that between his location and the Netherlands on that date there was a good chance of an opening from 1600-1730z, according to W6ELprop.

Ed Stokes, W1KOK of Randolph Center, Vermont asks if there is a W6ELprop version for Macintosh. No, there isn't, although Ed says he would like to port it to Mac. In the 2008 ARLP049 (http://www.arrl.org/w1aw/prop/2008-arlp049.html) we answered a similar question, and were pointed toward DX Toolbox at http://www.blackcatsystems.com/software/dxtoolbox.html, and also a site at http://www.machamradio.com/software/software.html for Macintosh ham radio software.

This week an interesting piece about sluggish flow inside the sun appeared, authored by two scientists on the GONG project. Read it at http://spie.org/x37587.xml?highlight=x2418&ArticleID=x37587.

Carl Luetzelschwab, K9LA, has another monthly column on propagation in the latest November issue of the now online-only WorldRadio Magazine. It is free, and you can download it in small parts or one big file at http://www.cq-amateur-radio.com/. Just click on the big WorldRadio Online button. Carl's column this month is on Short-path Summer Solstice Propagation, and begins on page 22. Also from that page you can click a link to see the rules for the CQ World-Wide DX Contest this weekend (Phone) and November 28-29 (CW).

Next week K7RA will be on the road, and it probably won't be practical to get the bulletin to Newington by Friday morning. Instead, we expect to have Steve Nichols, G0KYA of Wymondham, England pitching in. Steve is on the Propagation Studies Committee of the Radio Society of Great Britain. Steve was the author of the PowerPoint presentation on WSPR he gave at the RSGB convention, which we referenced in last week's bulletin.

If you would like to make a comment or have a tip for our readers, email the author at, k7ra@arrl.net.

For more information concerning radio propagation, see the ARRL Technical Information Service at http://www.arrl.org/tis/info/propagation.html. For a detailed explanation of the numbers used in this bulletin, see http://www.arrl.org/tis/info/k9la-prop.html. An archive of past propagation bulletins is at http://www.arrl.org/w1aw/prop/.

Sunspot numbers for October 15 through 21 were 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 11, and 0 with a mean of 1.6. 10.7 cm flux was 70.4, 69.6, 70.7, 70.1, 70.9, 71, and 71.3 with a mean of 70.6. Estimated planetary A indices were 4, 4, 2, 1, 1, 1 and 1 with a mean of 2. Estimated mid-latitude A indices were 3, 3, 0, 0, 1, 0 and 1 with a mean of 1.1.

I full-heatedly support your removal of your children from our socialist schools. The one thing this country needs more then anything else is a pool of cheap uneducated labors to make our xmas tree lights. This will definitely help our economy by bringing back companies from third world countries and you will help Obama. Cool!

This is a bad trend in my view. Nobody needs HD radio and the FM I get now is just fine. I can't tell the difference between 1% distortion and 0.01% and my ears are fine. It's all bullshit to me.
HDTV is only 2M Pixels, so whoopee for that, too.
If they go to digital AM then we will have a real shortage of engineers in about 15 years. I got hooked by building ever better crystal sets starting at 8 years old.
Take that away and most kids will never start tinkering.
It may be too late anyway, since the last kid's stuff seems to be those stupid Radio Shack '100 projects in one kit' sets.

All Eras come to an end
-cause- after all they are 'eras' :

The Vacuum Tube Era . . .

The Transistor & Discrete Component Era . . .

The Integrated Circuit Era . . .

The AM & Shortwave Radio Era . . .

The FM & FM Stereo Radio Era . . .

The Black & White TV Era . . .

The Color TV Era . . .

The Web & UseNet & Dial-Up Era . . .

We are now in the AGE of High Speed Internet/WWW

We are now in the All Things Digital AGE and when these Ages are over they too will be called Eras

what's new is anew with each passing era ~ RHF

I've a question: How much interference do you think is generated by all those pretty lights in LV?

Do you feel that you get a lot, or just the routine noise?

I picked up three big bags of pecans off of my back yard this afternoon.I know how to clean them, but I needs to figure out a faster way to crack the shells.Maybe I will lay some of them on my concrete front porch and lay a heavy thick square piece of concrete over them and push it around on top of them and see what happens.Sure, I can take them to Hutto's yard and garden center on Ellis Ave and pay them to crack the pecans for me, but I prefer to do it myself.

I'm 61 and have seen it all, almost. The problem I have with all this is not lack of understanding since I am an engineer. I got hooked on electronics due to analog radio and the fact that I could build a crystal set when I was 8 or 9 years old. When I wanted to improve it I added some transistors, which my dad hated due to the cost of a single 2N107 or 2N170. At any rate I self educated myself and by ten years old I was buying used console short wave sets and fixing them up and probably could have gotten a job as a repair tech at 11 years old. That motivated me all the way to college, at which point I found myself way ahead of the rest of the classes. These days things are going needlessly complex and tinkering is just about out. I can fix ANYTHING built before 1980 since I can get down to the real component level, but the new stuff is throw away.
Is anybody stupid enough to think that a Play station will make kids want to go into electronics?
The more of this we buy the richer China gets and we fall further behind.
The Commies are just loving taking our money.

It did when he had to repair it all. We had relative peace and quiet for about 2 months then he came back on. His next move was to tell the feds to get the hell offa his channel, which was about 26 MHz with the VCO/slider setup he had. He went off the air permanently in about 2 days. They triangulated his house and the rest is history.

Get a car and jack up one of the drive wheels just barely off the concrete. Block the other 3 wheels for safety then start the engine and put it in gear so the one tire spins. Take a handful of nuts and toss them under the wheel from about 3 feet away and they will spit out the other side of the wheel nicely cracked. Works good with walnuts.
Just be careful, and never get within 2 feet of the wheel or you could get the same treatment.

Cheers,

Why?
I spoke the truth about an evil religion and it's demented followers.
Muslim is evil, even worse than Christianity.
Religion in general is outdated, now we have science.
If anything needs to be done to ensure we survive the next century it should be the elimination of religion.
It has never done any good in any of it's forms, but has been the excuse for ignorance, poverty, and war for over 2,000 years.
Your turn.

I probably just get the routine noise. Now if my QTH was right on the Strip then the lights might cause more interference. In any case, my reception isn't too good because I'm doing my SWL on low cost portable receivers, with no great antennas.

Last night I heard the Cuban morse station on 5810 around 0700 with the phone ringing in the background. Also R New Zeeland int was pegging my S meter at 40 over on 9765 at 0800 with very little fade.

2432. More noise from lamps.

This week I have been trying to find noise sources to get rid of so I can listen to some quality shortwave.
First I found the Chinese CFL's to be horrendous and should be reported to the F.C.C., as if they will do anything.
Last night I had another noise source to kill, a 3 way touch lamp that uses an SCR. I turned it off thinking the noise would go away but it got even louder with the light off. Picked it up and looked on the bottom and sure enough, "Made in China.". The only way to stop the noise is to unplug it completely, making about a 20dB improvement in the noise floor.
I don't know which other things make RFI this bad but so far "Made in China." seems to be a warning label for total crap products.

These smaal solar panles for eg cell phone/gsm have so much electronics inside thatthey make a hell of a lot of noise if you use them with radio's.

"stinking Chinese electronics??" It is / was the same with our

That, and it's nearly impossible anymore to find non-Chinese electronics.

People used to whine about how bad Japanese electronics was in the 50's and 60's. That was mostly jingoism, though, since most Japanese electronics was as good as US electronics (by the mid 70's, it was superior). The current crop of Chinese Junk electronics makes ANYTHING prior to 1980 look positively top notch

I have a very old pecan shell cracker, I think it is anyway.I guess some people would say it is an antique.The jaws look sort of like Alligator jaws at a right angle to the handle, it is made of cast iron, there are grooves in the jaws.There is a spring under the handle.It is mounted on a board with big old timey looking wood screws.I think the name which is stamped into the cast iron says Blake Breaker.

In case you haven't noticed, his credibility amongst the American

They see this as a great salvation from the HD experience, because they've already invested that money, and everything that they're putting on their secondary [HD] channels, that their audience isn't able to hear either because of the antenna problems with HD, their location, or because they don't want to invest in HD radio, said Sopato. All of those secondary streams are on the web and on this radio. Now, they don't have to tell their audience, 'go get an HD Radio.'" stopiboc.com is not an anonymous blog - if you visited stopibc.com you would see thatr it is run by Bob Savage WYSL. Like Struble, you talk out of your ass:

"HD Radio Initiatives: Today's New Opportunities"

"Struble began the session by citing the latest HD radio sales and broadcaster data. He noted that while sales of HD Radios are sharply increasing, especially with the new portable Best Buy Insignia and Zune HD models, the economy and declining station revenues have slowed adoption a bit on the broadcaster side. We’re selling millions, but we need to be selling in the tens of millions.”

"Struble: Radio Is the Last Analog Medium Standing"

"Insignia HD — I think this will be a nice little interim step for jogging or working out. It proves the viability [of the technology] and hopefully we'll get sales; but no, this is not going to sell in the hundreds of thousands... Radio alone — the sad reality of where it is — as a standalone device, it just doesn't exist anymore as a category. Nobody goes into Best Buy and says 'Where's the radio department?'"

So, which is it, Bob Struble? I think we all know the answer - LOL!

We need to close all offshore bank accounts like Raygoon did to the Coke runners in the 80's and give the traitor's money to the nations who are harboring these Wall Street crooks. In that movie with Johnny Depp, that dope runner lost avout $80 million cash.
That's a drop in the bucket compared to what Bush/Cheney have and their 'base' that got them appointed.

I am my employer and I can tell you the costs of employee health care do not even begin to approach the costs of business taxes, worker's comp premiums, SS and payroll taxes...

It's not even close.

In any case, there's not a single bill that doesn't require businesses pay a significant portion of the "reform", most commonly in the form of an additional 8% tax to be paid by said business.

What else you got?

I picked up about twenty or thirty more pecans from my back yard this morning.I can't hardly eat pecans anymore because they tear up my guts too much.This Friday, I am going to take them to Hutto's yard and garden center.Hutto's has the machinery to clean them and crack them and shell them.Yesterday, my sister came over here (as per usual on Sunday afternoons to see if I am still alive and kicking) and we picked up two bags of pecans.

I used to have two more pecan trees, one in my front yard and another one in my back yard.Hurricane Katrina weakened those pecan trees, they were near my house and leaning too much toward my house.In June of 2006, I had them cut down and hauled away.A guy and his two sons from Idaho and another guy cut them down for me, $400.00 each pecan tree.Right now, I am working on sawing down that pecan tree stump in my front yard, at ground level with one of my hand saws.

Nope. Just the hard stats of rising health care costs.

Even the health insurance companies don't dispute this fact, so it's odd that you would.

cau·cus
Pronunciation: \'kȯ-kəs\ Function: noun
Etymology: origin unknown
Date: 1763

: a closed meeting of a group of persons belonging to the same political party or faction usually to select candidates or to decide on policy; also : a group of people united to promote an agreed-upon cause

(Merriam Webster Dictionary)

Closed meeting, that sounds like racism, doesn't it? That's not Democracy, that's bigotry? Regardless, checking out CSPAN, with the "closed caption" option turned on, and guess who wasted a bunch of time discussing "voter infractions"? Sheila Jackson Lee? Guess how many times "photo id" was mentioned in the CONGRESSIONAL BLACK CUACUS?

But they were so so POLITE exchanging floor time?

And clean too? That's just so important to think about? Because you are really dirty?

See, when we chop up the video into ten second segments, that closed captioning helps you determine how to help you group the video for future projects?

So staring at goats involves the Hill Billy Goat Caucus? LOL.

So snaping their minds with the thought of a photo id is enough to make them.say

mmmm mmm mmmmm RUSH HUDSON LIMBUAGH mmm mmmmm mmmmmm

If you want to follow the transcription by splitting the video up, you can probably go for two second splits, at one frame per second? That seems to be the duration of sentence, about two seconds?

No photo id, no $500 a day where all you have to do is say a few sentences at two seconds a piece?

Why doesn't the White House Caucus email CSPAN transcriptions, since they love email so much?

Yup. In what passes for the minds of Palinistas, there can be only two positions: (A) unalloyed hatred for the wicked Commie Obama and all he stands for, or (B) mindless worship at the foot of Obama's pearly throne. And anyone who claims a political position anywhere between those two extremes is only covering up their odious worship of the child-raping Kenyan Anti-Christ.

For those with a sociological turn of mind, this is a portrait of how a once-dominant political party commits suicide.

Draft:

The federal government thinks it can require health care mandates on the states, yet the states are bound by laws to balance their budgets? Well, that explains why Medicaid programs are in trouble?

Missing from the debate is the fact that medical treatments are sometimes based on guess work, and either highly accurate or inaccurate testing, resulting in faulty treatment programs that either produce more medical symptoms worse than the condition (serious vaccination side effects for flu shots, for one common example) or outcomes that do not treat the illness.

More or less, a serious illness can drive treatment costs up to the value of a new car, and not even treat the condition, which is the point I am driving at. Common sense tells you that you can't saddle your government with those kind of expenditures and expect to not have problems.

Health care was not meant to be mandated by the government, health care was simply that act of God that is not meant to be regulated by government. What's next, we all need cars, we all need homes, we all need college educations, we all need foreign travel to different countries to learn how to integrate into the "world community"?

To sum up, health care is an educated gamble, and the current system is based on a cost structure that includes buffers to pay for those that can not pay. To cover the current system as is, is to include the costs of those buffers, which have taken years to develop, and hide, from the public.

It is also comical to listen to or watch debate from members of Congress who try to relate to the public their personal "experience" with the health care system when they make $500 a day. Determining the real health care costs and eliminate fraud and waste in the system is like trying to verify the nuclear power ambitions of Iran?

It sure appears that way when many view the government as an alternate economy. There is no economical solution for something that has not, or is not, meant to be covered by the United States constitution. You can't pass it off to the states under expanding medicaid programs, states will be forced to raise property tax rates and kick people out of their homes.

If you jack up the sales tax, then people begin to loose jobs because of the inflation caused by the purchasing power of the dollar? If you can't do it with a nickel sales tax increase, it can not be done?

Being that this is the most exciting, most entertaining, fact finding, brain busting, fun loving, liberal egg shell mind crunching, invincible smacketh downeth erectus among us, you can't see the truth coming, but you know it is anyway, sonic boom of Conservatism, and, most powerful keyboard in the world,

do you feel lucky?

Yep.. just another HRD to worry about while drivers are talking on their cell phones, texting, doing their nails, spilling coffee in their laps, etc.

Some states used to charge a significant additional fee to register a car with a radio in it because they felt even that was too much of a distraction.

From your article:

In a blind test, the AP gave temperature data to four independent statisticians and asked them to look for trends, without telling them what the numbers represented. The experts found no true temperature declines over time.

"If you look at the data and sort of cherry-pick a micro-trend within a bigger trend, that technique is particularly suspect," said John Grego, a professor of statistics at the University of South Carolina.

Yet the idea that things are cooling has been repeated in opinion columns, a BBC news story posted on the Drudge Report and in a new book by the authors of the best-seller "Freakonomics." Last week, a poll by the Pew Research Center found that only 57 percent of Americans now believe there is strong scientific evidence for global warming, down from 77 percent in 2006.

Global warming skeptics base their claims on an unusually hot year in 1998. Since then, they say, temperatures have dropped ï¿½ thus, a cooling trend. But it's not that simple.

Since 1998, temperatures have dipped, soared, fallen again and are now rising once more. Records kept by the British meteorological office and satellite data used by climate skeptics still show 1998 as the hottest year. However, data from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and NASA show 2005 has topped 1998. Published peer-reviewed scientific research generally cites temperatures measured by ground sensors, which are from NOAA, NASA and the British, more than the satellite data.

The recent Internet chatter about cooling led NOAA's climate data center to re-examine its temperature data. It found no cooling trend.

"The last 10 years are the warmest 10-year period of the modern record," said NOAA climate monitoring chief Deke Arndt. "Even if you analyze the trend during that 10 years, the trend is actually positive, which means

Maybe you should read the shit you post links to...

My personal belief is that health care goes along with that whole life, liberty and pursuit of happiness thing. Cars, education, and foreign travel are perks, not rights. Homes... well, shelter is one of the three basic needs to preserve life, but people have lived over the centuries in open caves, straw huts, wooden shacks, frame houses, igloos. People still live in the three latter, plus the occasional cardboard box or bridge.. Were it up to me, all vacant buildings in inner cities would be converted to indigent housing, with a requirement for some form of recompense (community service, etc.) from those who live there, and a legitimate effort thereby to better their own lot. But then, I'm not likely to ever have my way.

The Declaration of Independence was a rabble-rousing pamphlet, not law.

"Provide for the Common Defense" (from the Constitution) covers it for me. Disease is a bigger enemy than any sandbox with oil.

Interesting to note that, when paraphrasing Locke and others, Jefferson changes "property" to "pursuit of happiness".

That is news to me.Which states used to charge an extra fee for cars with radios in them?

My 1978 Dodge van didn't have a radio or a hole for the antenna when I bought the van in 1989.There was a little removable panel which I removed for a radio I bought at a K-Mart store.I had to drill a (in the right front fender) hole for the antenna.

I remember when car radios and heaters were optional accessories for cars and trucks.

Just one year ago, would you have believed that an unelected government official, not even a Cabinet member confirmed by the Senate but simply one of the many "czars" appointed by the President, could arbitrarily cut the pay of executives in private businesses by 50 percent or 90 percent?

Did you think that another "czar" would be talking about restricting talk radio? That there would be plans afloat to subsidize newspapers-- that is, to create a situation where some newspapers' survival would depend on the government liking what they publish?

I thought the "pay cuts" only applied to execs of companies that took the governments bailout money in order to survive. If that is the case, then the companies would have gone under without the bailout so it's only fair the government impose some conditions as to how the companies operate. Especially so when, in the publics mind, the exec pay is excessive with respect to company profitability.

The majority stock holders wanted the executive pay cut. When it's put that way any good free market person would think that cutting pay is the way to go. Now throw in that the majority stock holder is the evil government and the repugs think that pay should go up.

That is how moronic the repugs are. We, the people of America, are the majority share holders in a bunch of financial companies. If we want pay cut, pay should be cut.

No further need for discussion.

The views may or may not be complete, either by design, to pre-empt being called a liar even if telling the truth, or by error due to typographical, grammer, or other technical communication problems not realized or imagined, or the possibility of views based on false or missing information, or with the intention of being used for entertainment purposes only, and not as a definitive judgement on the actions, character, or reputation of an organization, individual, or groups of individuals, with the intent of communicating with a limited group of people, and not the general public, however no distribution restrictions apply for fair use purposes described by the US Copyright Office, if no other restrictions are present or communicated, with all commercial proceeds associated with the distribution of the content to remain the sole possesion of the original author.

d) Any humor if used, is not intended to offend people, and may be designed to apply the principals of peer pressure through reverse examination to accomplish the communication of principals or ideas that consist of traditional or proposed social values that are proven to advance the common good, and are not meant to discredit, disparage or demean any person or entities in any professional or personal manner, by attempting to share through the eyes or opinion of the author, for which it is expected that you read at your own risk, with no liability held to the author or any third parties who may store, transfer, or forward this message to others, in the traditions of free speech, fair use, and to play a positive role in a society that believes that graphically depicting male homosexuals having sex, and other unusual sex acts is considered free speech or that the use of abortion to limit Negros, Latinos, and other races from "spreading the wealth around" as a "matter of privacy" (which the author does not condone).

e)The use of humor is a known ingredient in providing teachable moments, and to validate and even demonstrate artistic expressions that are not shared by others, as demonstrated by many valuable scientific observations that were scoffed at in the past, yet proven to be quite valid decades later, upon which the humor used in all electronic communications by the author are based, in the principals and traditions of free speech and pursuit of happiness, and may not be a representation of others, including God.

h) It is the opinion of the author that effective 1 December, 2009, the proposed regulations from the FTC violate the first and fifth amendments of the United States Constitution, by infringing through economic affliction the burden without compensation all financial details concerning the communications of both free enterprise and opinion, and other civil rights such as "punishment must be fair" and not at the "discretion" of public officials, or that advertisers are assumed to be guilty of deception when United States law provides that you are innocent before being proven guilty, and are in fact demonstrations that there are current members of Congress that neither understand the spirit of the law our founding fathers made for the United States of America, or understand how they work in the opinion of the author, as of October 10th, 2009, especially in light of anticipated, and hopefully defeated, legislative taxes relating to energy use and the burden of publishers and advertisers to comply with the law and manage the environment, and in light that there are various consumer protection agencies, including the Better Business Bureau, which has free consumer information.

i)Although the content provided meets or exceeds those new requirements to the knowledge of the author, and modifications to version 1.3 of this disclaimer is a result of the opinion of the author that blogging is another definition for a potentially infinite number or forms of electronic communication, as such the author will retroactively apply this version, 1.4 to all forms of previous communications, when and wherever possible, as time allows, in order to properly convey the intention of the author and to demonstrate an enthusiasm to comply with the law, and not enthusiastically pursue getting high on cocaine as often as possible as Barack Hussein Obama has admitted in his book (paraphrase, synopsis), according to (mmm, mmm, mmm (sonic emphasis)) Rush Hudson Limbaugh, (mmm mmm mmm (sonic emphasis)).

j) Use of this disclaimer for either personal or professional use is permitted with no restrictions. These restrictions or disclaimers do not prohibit the author from pursuing or communicating in a truthful manner, or guarantee that the audience will understand all things as intended, and, or result in being called incoherent, or even a Chicken Chaser!

No, a year ago, when our economy was showing signs of being a house of cards, we were ruled by a Brother Stair fan, who thought that if the Rapture didn't save him the Health&Wealth Gospel would!

Mr. Obama and Mr. Clinton are the only real Republicans left!!

So what's important to a conservative is that what ever you do Castro and Chavez have to hate it. Doesn't matter how it hurts this county, the evil commies have to hate it. Well not all the evil commies, the Chinese hold far to many of our bonds. Thanks Pres. Bush!

So what Obama should do is randomly invade other countries, kill thousands of our troops for no reason and lower taxes and have another depression. That's what Bush did and look at the results.....if being sick makes you happy.

2553. iBiquity's fraudulant IPO - LOL!

Bob Struble posted this on Twitter a few weeks ago:

"Good NYC trip. Wall St way more upbeat than recently. IPO pipeline better, but most think rally was too fast. Folks liking HD Radio progress"

http://twitter.com/rjstruble/status/3884404775

But, DIYmedia got ahold of his tweet:

"Robert Struble Channels Lee DeForest"

"iBiquity's President and CEO, Robert Struble, has taken to tweeting. In early September, he revealed he'd taken the train to Wall Street to float the notion of taking iBiquity public: 'Good NYC trip. Wall St way more upbeat than recently. IPO pipeline better, but most think [stock market] rally was too fast'... Here's where the history lesson comes in. In the early 20th century, Lee DeForest, inventor of the 'audion' tube spent a portion of his early career engaged with unscrupulous businessmen in the practice of 'pumping and dumping' stock in radio companies featuring his invention. Partly because DeForest wasn't exactly sure how his invention worked, and partly because the regulatory paradigm of broadcasting hadn't been firmly established yet, many of his ventures failed, and DeForest spent much of his life engaged in patent lawsuits (although he was acquitted of stock fraud, his business partners weren't). One might say the same about Bob Struble and iBiquity. Although HD Radio is 'workable,' it doesn't work well, and even broadcasters don't fully understand how to implement the technology. Given the wobbly future of the HD Radio protocol, it is not far-fetched to see a historical parallel between Struble and DeForest."

http://www.diymedia.net/archive/1009.htm#101709

Now, I'm getting hits from all over the US, searching on "iBiquity IPO" - here's the one from Price Waterhouse Coopers LLP in NYC, that Struble must have been talking with, searching on "iBiquity IPO"

http://tinyurl.com/ygov9tm

The cat in now out of the bag - what a fucking loser - LMFAO!!!

Of course, the IPO market is all but dead:

"Market Structure is Causing the IPO Crisis"
October 2009

"Over the last several years, the IPO market in the United States has practically disappeared. While conventional wisdom may say the U.S. IPO market is going through a cyclical downturn exacerbated by the recent credit crisis, many experts are beginning to share the view of a new and much darker reality: The market for underwritten IPOs, given its current structure, is closed to 80% of the companies that need it... The first six months of 2009 represents the worst IPO market in 40 years. Given that the size of the U.S. economy, in real GDP terms, is over 3x what it was 40 years ago, this is a remarkable and frightening state of affairs. Only 12 companies went public in the United States in the first half of 2009, and only eight of them were U.S. companies."

We own financial companies, we as Americans. We own a the majority stake in banks and Wall Street financial groups. We own Fanny and Freddie. We own AIG, a nationalized company. That's own, moron, they were nationalized.

From what drivel came from your mouth I doubt that you have ever gotten a loan. Do you know that when you have a line of credit, a type of loan, the holder of the line can just walk in and take a look around! Wow, never heard of that did you? Even the companies we loaned money to had to agree to certain things like what payments they would make and business they would and wouldn't conduct.

The biggest loan you ever got came from the Bank of the Back Pocket.

2555. FS: NEW Minicircuits ZKL-1R5 RF MICROWAVE AMPLIFIER(s) 10MHz-1.5GHz. $38.70 or $50 on Ebay [LOT of TEN, ZKL1R5]

LOT of TEN or Singles.
Minicircuits ZKL-1R5 [ZKL1R5] RF MICROWAVE AMPLIFIER(s), Wideband 10MHz-1.5GHz.
High-end Amps, MedPower +18.7dBm, LowNoise 3dB, Gain 39-40dB. NEW - in original Minicircuits/antistatic packaging (never used, USA origin & location, ships worldwide).
Either Singles or entire LOT (price shown for a Lot, but message us if you want single(s) - shipping is CHEAPER than shown ($5.20), etc. however on a quantity basis you save by dealing as a Lot, not Singles - message us if you just need a few, not all 10 units).

Posted on Ebay, item# 330371507322 - goto www.ebay.com & enter 330371507322 into search. "BuyNow" OPTION is AVAILABLE - NO need to wait for Auction ending.
Contact via Ebay (best) or Email. By Email, can hit "Reply" in Newsgroups but REMOVE "nospam" strings if appears in my address (edit address manually, but sometimes it’s already done) so I could respond from a real address/name. Do NOT reply on Newsgroups (I posted here, but will NOT read), and if I get much spam that address will be DISABLED, so you'll have to communicate via Ebay (which, incidentally, is more secure anyway). My Ebay feedback is 100% positive, not to mention 14 YEARS of Newsgroups trading without complains. Again, description is on Ebay but a few facts are copied here (for convenience):

 TECHNICAL SPECS:
A DATASHEET PDF is at manufacturer's site www.minicircuits.com-->enter "ZKL-1R5" into search--> datasheet (do not omit dash, ZKL1R5 instead of ZKL-1R5 will result in an error); so only a few specs are copied below. Finally, check the price Minicircuits is asking - $150/unit, we're asking $39 "auction start" & $56 "buynow" options - new/sealed units but @33% cost (reason to sell is explained below)
• Wideband, 10MHz to 1.500 GHz
• IP3 +31 dBm typ.
• LowNoise 3 dB typ. (not bad for a MedPower amp, rather than dedicated LNA)
• Gain 40 dB typ., Flatness 1.2dB
• VSWR IN 1.4, OUT 1.6
• P1dB Compression Point +15dB min, however charts indicate 17.6 to 18.7dBm

• Connectors - SMA (50 Ohm impedance), gold-plated.
• DCpower +12V nom @115mA max, but will take a range of 9-13V or wider.
• More data, plots, etc. are in a datasheet (PDF) downloadable from manufacturer's website.
Example of applications: communication systems e.g. cellular, satellite distribution, GSM/ISM; Radars, we're using them in a Middle-Stage Amplifier block in an MRI (magnetic) scientific instrument.

 REASON to SELL::
Our RF Engineer has changed Product design in which this amplifier was previously used (a scientific instrument); so not all purchased lots of ZKL-1R5 could be finished before new design "kicked in". In the new design, ZKL1R5 overloads the newly designed next amplifying stage (which became more sensitive) & we don't know a clean way to attenuate ZKL1R5's gain (38-40dB!, lowering powersupply is not a solution & not enough). So instead we switched to using ZFL-500 amps with lower gain & narrower bandwidth (0.5Ghz, in fact all we need is 0.2GHz, not even 0.5GHz). Minicircuit's policy is not to take them back & it's laborious to try to retrofit these into a new system - it's better if we simply sell, at a loss or not, but it's easier. We're already stocked on 60 ZFL-500's, so design change is permanent/verified.

I, in fact, come from a competing RF company (not to be mentioned) so not interested in promoting Minicircuits, but this is one of Minicircuits better models; as far as I know it's using Gallium/Indium PHEMT/etc. FET’s or something to that effect, not surprising but $150 price is already difficult to attain, yet we ask even 3-4x times less or to exchange for ZFL500 (Minicircuits said ‘no”). It's a pity at the new company where I moved in 2008, which is using RF Amps (not designing them), we cannot use ZKL1R5 due to gain excessive for a new design (was normal in an older design), also we decided don't need 1.5GHz expensive amps considering our signals are under 200MHz.

P.S. Again, more photos are at that http://photos.starium.org site - pictures are better than a lengthy verbal description.

I wasn't here 10 years ago (this group), but it has gotten worse. It seems the Chinese are flaunting American Stupidity and getting away

Missed the point. I am an engineer and got that way from loving the tinkering. Give a kid a box of 'dust' '05001' SMD parts and you will not have a happy kid building things. I have two microscopes at home, both lab grade, and some of the passive SMD is getting ridiculous. Concepts look good in my head, schematic looks good, Spice simulation is OK, final product is microscopic. Hard to tinker, and I don't know many kids who will want to play SMD.

I use these things in my ceiling fans(3 per fan) only because they give the equivalent of 100 watts of light in each 60 watt fixture.
The do make a hell of a buzzing noise! Some worse than others of the same brand. Sure smell when the burn out too.
Anyway what I found was that if I wrap the glass shades on the fan with aluminum foil (still allows good heat transfer) and ground it to the fan case.... Voila! The buzzing stops.
Those suckers sure do radiate. I only loose a minimal of light doing this.
Maybe they should come with some kind of screening device/mesh packed in the package. I really don't think I need the radiation especially from three of the suckers directly over my head.

Yada, yada, yada.

Every time I go to the Home Depot I buy two package of the incandescent bulbs. I think I have about 200 of em now. Probably more than I'll need for the rest of my life. I figure that when Obama gets around to outlawing them I'll sell em each for a buck.

Does the efficiency of the incandescent bulb go up in the winter in northern climates when you got to heat your house up anyway? How does that work? What if i need to put a lightbulb under my trailer to keep the pipes from freezing. Is the new green lightbulb going to help me to keep pipes from freezing?

Yes, NEO is back. I've been doing outside stuff and riding my bike.
I'm moving my act back inside for the cooler WX so you lucky turds will see more of me.

The AM DX has been fairly good over the past few evenings here in Rochester, NY.

I am very happy to report that my employer has recently gotten some large orders for military radios and we have been able to hire an additional few hundred factory workers. I work for Harris and we produce the world's best communication gear.

I hope that the economy is getting back on track and everybody goes back to work.

I think Al Gore should charter a shuttle flight to the sun and take Obama with him. Then they can see for themselves where global warming is coming from.

No disrespect intended, and yes, they are good for many situations.
If you like em for the fan then that's good. It's nice to see the conscience effort to conserve energy. I don't like them cause they look funny, produce strange light,give me a headache, make my radios buzz, and I'm told they have mercury in them. Let's just keep the mercury in the vaccines where it belongs;)

Simple reason I'm asking is I'm trying to judge if it is worth while making a program I have just written available to a wider audience.

The only way you become an engineer is by getting a degree ending in "E".

I am comfortable placing parts barely larger than a salt crystal. I have $30 2X Mag Eyes and I can read the numbers on SMD.

I don't believe you. The consensus in the ham community is that, as a rule, the CFLs are not noisy. There ARE some that DO make noise, but they are an aberration. That's why we buy things where we can return them if we don't like them.

That's how Cuba works, isn't it?

That's not how Medicare works, however. The most radical progressive idea on this matter is Medicare for All. Not state hospitals and a medical corps.

... and I'm wondering what sort of good replacements are available at a reasonable price. I got my radio from my grandfather when he gave up on his radio hobby and realistically can't afford to spend more than $100-$150 to replace it. The main thing the replacement would need to do would be to pull in MW and SW signals as the Grundig still works flawlessly with FM broadcasts.

Does anybody have ggood suggestions for a poor student who enjoys tuning in to the world?

Draft article for www.radiotalkingpoints.com

Endorsing Rep. Hutchison? You're kidding right? I'll have to follow up on that one, but I am not going to blindly follow Newt Gingrich and Dick Cheney down the Uncle Tom path or one that is confusing? Whatever you political opinion is on spending, the United States has to cut back on spending, not justify it?

So why support political candidates that favor the kind of spending excuses that create more problems than they solve? Bill White runs a safe haven city? Any more bright ideas Mr. Cheney, by rewarding someone who has apparently decided that we are not worth fighting for in Washington?

Looking forward to the answers. If Mr. Cheney and Newt Gingrich can not answer questions about their endorsements, then as far as I am concerned, thank you for your service, and please step out of the way, we have a country to rescue.

Because I feel like I am wasting my time, trying to convince Democrats to represent me a certain way, and then people like Dick Cheney and Newt Gingrich only add confusion to the mix by the strategic games that make no sense. You want me to go knocking on doors, door to door, in neighborhoods largely made up of high school drop outs, and you don't have the courtesy to make the political system easy to understand and transparent?

Gee thanks Dick and Newt, we are only trying to talk to people that want to be communists?

I started this thread and the lamps I have are damn well noisy, and I can't return them since they were purchased at Wal-Mart as replacements as the incandescents burn out. The only offender to top these is the SCR touch lamp I have by my bed side. China, again! Lucky me, I don't use that lamp and the shortwave at the same time because it blotto's any AM under 20 MHz.
My lamps for SWL are now the tubes in my Hammarlund, just enough to tune by.

It can be a lot!!! I am an engineer and the latest thing being hyped is switch-mode controllers for LED lighting, so you can bet some company will design a perfectly loud lamp in China.
P.F. correction circuits will ensure that this noise is over the full
A.C. cycle and not just at the peaks anymore.
Progress.

Really?
All my business cards (from work) say engineer, damn good one, too, but no degree ending in "E". I will take smarts over paper anytime, since I have had guys with Masters from Cal Poly that were useless. One guy, at least, a recent graduate tried to tell me (His mentor to the company) started out by telling me he was a 'real' engineer with his degree.
Then he walks into the test department (mine, too) and complains that a data book is misprinted and shows 3 leads for a 2 lead device. He was holding a T-03 power transistor and my guys in test almost fell off their chairs laughing. I had to let him go after that one.

On a 0.5mm by 1mm part???

How is a kid supposed to choose a college major if he doesn't even know if he will like it? I wanted to go all the way to a post-grad nuclear-physics and math in Chicago but moving to California kind of derailed my college plans. So here I am having done electronics since the 60's, no degree.

George W. Bush was called president but was he qualified???

Hi folks,

A little while ago, I was goofing around with the Long Wave band on my radio. I picked up Radio Havana, and some other stations that are usually found on Short Wave.

Why? Can anybody explain this?

Thanks!!

Hi,

I'm using a new Roberts Revival R250 with slide rule dial.

Ok, that helps. A number of possibilities, here. Cross modulation product. And image. And overload product. Radio Habana is a strong signal, and on receivers with less headroom and substandard image rejection or filtration, overload is common on particularly strong signals. This can create images up and down the dial, even on different bands.

You may have signal mixing somewhere in your local environment, with the lower product falling into the LW band.

If the issue exists on all your LW receivers, it's less likely to be an issue that originates within the receiver.

I can second that about the CCrane SW radio. It is the Redsun RP-2100, and has a built in dual ferrite antenna. Pulls in great MW DX. John Plimmer, the premier MW DXer here, has the Redsun version himself.
Also, pulls in awesome FM!

It has been so damn hot here, I wish for the cool/cold, clear nights, with all the MW stations booming in. Now, it is only local crap, mostly overridden by Cubans. South Florida is the pits for radio DX. If you want Cubans or the Caribbean, then it is OK, but for everything else, forget about it.

I must apologize... I failed to realize your two brain cells must be full from non-stop "entertainment" from FAUX and Limpballs who for some unknown reason keep calling this Obama's fault. It must suck for you having such a short selective memory.

But I, as well as history know that the unfortunate Pres. Bush declared the war several years ago before the election. Though, it was a "token" war at the time. Bush had to protect the long time Bush family friends (the bin Ladens) but yet appease the american public due to 9-11. GW put little if no effort into the afghan effort costing yet more american lifes. American life's spent to protect the son of the Bin-Laden families who indirectly contribute to the GOP efforts.

It's yet another mess left for Obama administration to clean up after the GOP raped our country placing it and the whole world in a dire situation.

Yet, lemmings like YOU keep working to destroy america using socialism as your weapon to allow the GOP to once again rape our banks, businesses and citizens in the name of blind capitalism.

Hi, this morning I tried a different radio, and picked up an AM station on the lower end of the LW band. This time there no Short Wave stations on either radio's LW band both picked up the same AM station.

By the way, this Roberts Revival Radio has the most sensitive AM and FM bands, it compares to my CC Radio.

View Full Version : Compact fluorescent light bulbs CFLs

We've been thinking about switching our incandescent bulbs to CFLs for certain lights in the house (the ones where we seem to replace a bulb every 45 days).

Anyone have experience with CFLs and their potential for creating RF interference. Any brands to favor any brands to strongly avoid?
KA2P
09-22-2007, 07:53 PM
My entire house is filled with them including two within ten feet of my radio. No interference whatsoever. If there is, I don't notice it.
However, I understand the older versions caused some problems.

09-22-2007, 08:20 PM
I replaced every single lamp in my house with CFL's. The only thing I've noticed is a lower electric bill. No noise whatsoever on any bands I frequent. They're definitely the way to go.
K3WRV
09-22-2007, 09:17 PM
Have 2 or three of them around, and no RFI problems 160-10, but don't know about VHF.
One problem in the basement. In one ceiling fixture that burns out incandescent bulbs frequently, the CFL lasted only about 3 months.
Bought it at a hamfest from a dealer. Made in China, and gave off "Mercury Vapor" (or LED Blue) light. Don't trust the wattage equivalents either - the 100 W "equivalent" produces less useable light than a 40 W incandescent. But the ones I bought from $afeway work FB, if a bit dim. Was going to change the whole house over to them, but not for the moment.

I use the "conserv-energy" ones (costco house brand), "commercial electric" (home depot house brand) and philips.

They are all good when comes to RFI, with no noticeable RFI on any ham band, shortwave or broadcast band that I listen to.

The conserv-energy ones have a high DOA rate. Almost every pack I've bought has had at least one DOA. They're usually returned for a pack that has no DOA ones.
WA9SVD
09-22-2007, 09:46 PM
I use several 100 Watt types (all spiral design) some 5-6 y/o, some that (with power co. subsidies) are brand new and cost 5/$1.00, and some are the new "dimmable" types usable with standard (SCR or TRIAC) dimmers. I've experienced no RFI from any of them (including one in a swivel lamp right above my radios) although the dimmer with an incandescent lamp DID cause a lot of hash on the lower HF bands. That disappeared with the CFL bulb. The only problem I've encountered is that the dimmable bulb, at certain medium light levels, blocks the (IR) signal from the TV remote! Block the bulb (or the pickup target on the TV) and all works fine. Minor annoyance, and remotes from VCR or DVD player are NOT affected. (It's an older 1984 vintage RCA TV.)

We've been gradually re-lamping the stables for the past couple of years and have been very satisfied. We've also been installing the CFL floods in the fixtures along the barn's ridge, 25' up. In cold weather, it'll take them a couple of minutes to reach full brilliance (unheated structure). Out of probably 40 bulbs installed, we've had two failures so far. We buy whatever Wal-Mart is stocking at the moment

I have a few in the house and have had no RFI problems. I can pick up a buzz if I place an AM/SW portable a couple of feet from a bulb.

Dimmer circuits can be a problem, though.
09-22-2007, 09:51 PM
I have not received any interference to the bands I operate (40 meters and higher) from florescent bulbs of any type.

I did once have a problem with the "touch lamps" which many have complained about as causing RF interference. The problem was not interference to my radio but my wife indicated that when I was using my radio the lamp kept switching on and off. I told the wife that it was because the RF from my radio antenna was getting into the lamps circuitry causing the problem. Being associated with a RF Engineer for many years my wife has gained many "trouble shooting" skills, She went over and unplugged the lamp. I have not heard of any further problems.

I have used several of the fluorescent spiral bulbs, I have noticed some wideband buzzing on some parts of the AMBC band when a portable radio is near the lamps. No problems on 160 or 80 M. Yes, there are problelms when listening for beacons on LW band.

I have a bunch of CFLs. No RFI, but I did have some cheap ones that produced audible whines and buzzes. One of those cheapies burned out in a week, and I returned the entire package for a refund. I've had bad luck with cheap brands and house brands, with units burning out after a short time. I've found Sylvania, Philips and GE brand CFLs to be reliable.

I started out many years ago with a few of the "straight" tube types that DID cause some RFI problems. Since then I have only used the "spiral" types and have had no problems with any of the various brands I use.

If you'll notice, that double helix on most CFLs is the same winding configuration as non-inductive wire-wound resistors. That cancels out a lot of the potential radiation.

Interesting.

I had always thought RFI was transmitted through the power lines from the switching power supply in the lamp, not the lamp bulb itself.

Newer lamps have an FCC compliance stamp on them, which probably means that they design them not to cause interference.

Try looking for lamps that have a high Color Rendering Index (CRI). Most CFL's have a CRI of anywhere from 72 to 82. A CRI of 100 is the best supposedly because it is supposed to have the same color rendering as sunlight. There are a few CFL's out there that have CRI's in the 90's. Also, some bulbs have the Color Temperature listed on them. It's given in Kelvins. The higher the number the bluer and (colder) the light and the lower the number the more yellow (Warmer) the light.

I know, buy a lamp shouldn't involve this kind of science but if you want accurate color rendering cheaply nothing beats the Incadescent bulbs. Most Incadescent bulbs have a CRI of 100 and a low color temp giving them a good appearance.

If you have an old FL fixture using the straight tubes or the "U" shaped ones and it's giving off interference, try checking the ballast. If it's the old magnetic type ballast you can replace that with the new electronic ballast. Of course, it would probably be cheaper to replace the entire fixture and use the newer Rapid start and instant start lamps. Another advantage to the Rapid starts on electronic ballasts is that some of the lamps they use employ "rare earth" materials in the lamp coatings allowing higher CRI's. I've seen some of the T-8 and T-12 lamp tubes with CRI's as high as 98.

I use FEIT ELECTRIC
(http://www.bulbamerica.com/FEIT-Electric-14-manuf.htm) mini-twists. They use 13 watts, have a standard base and provide 800 lumens. No interference at all and they last 24/7 for years. You can buy them on the net and last year I noticed they were available at Home Depot. I use two in my radio shack and haven't noticed any RFI at all. Wish I could say the same for my router...

I'm just sort of disappointed the QL bulbs they were researching in the late 90's didn't seem to take off. Amazing technology and the lumens per watt rating was similar to low pressure sodiums but had excellent color rendering.

Also read up on sulphur lamps. Now that is some way out technology. It did make for an evening of interesting reading.

My 2 cents -

I have many in and around the house. Here are observations from years of usage.

Lights of America - made in China, short lived junk.
FEIT - long life and very, very rf quiet - recommend!!
Miscellaneous other brands made in China - horrible rf generators - I have some on the test bench and have to switch to incandescent before I align a receiver.

Calibrated pulse? A stroboscope is essentially a calibrated shutter.
Nothing more. You heterodyne it against the 60 Hz flicker of the lamps.

Thanks. Two crossings per cycle. Thanks.

The point being missed is that CFLs turn on and off thousands of times a second, therefore have much less flicker than coal buring Edison lamps.

I have 2 main receivers: an ICOM R75 (usually parked on 10.140 USB); and my Ten-Tec 516 Argonaut V no-code amateur radio.

If you used small loops or phased arrays of active verticals, etc., you

Just try squaring that "opt-out" provision for states with the Constitution's "equal protection" clauses. How do you make different Obamacare - or the same Obamacare at different prices depending on what state you're in - square with those "equal protection" clauses of the Constitution?

I don't believe you. The consensus in the ham community is that, as a

they are an aberration. That's why we buy things where we can return

I have a couple of loops, but the Cubans are on all the good frequencies!
880, 1210, 660, and other East Coast stations. I have the CCrane SW radio, the clone of the Redsun RP-2100, and my boatanchors, HQ-145XC, HE-30.
The locals hog: 560, 610,740,760 950, 960, 980, 1000,1450,1580, and that is not even the whole list! My loop can be effective to some extent. How about the CCrane powered Dual Ferrite Loop? Anyone have any experience with that? Wish that the Kiwa Loop was still being made.

Back in the 1970s, I bought a Phillips made in Netherlands CFL from a local area W.T.Grant store which was going out of business.It was a three parts Phillips CFL unit, three seperate parts which I plugged together.I used that Phillips CFL in my bathroom untill the bulb burnt out over fourteen years later.I currently use two CFLs in my house, one in my kitchen and one in my bathroom.I never turn them off.

Sounds like you've got a strong local signal in your area that's producing mix products in your receivers. Likely that AM. But it can also be a strong local FM, or even a stray signal from an unexpected source. Like another electronic device.

Consumer grade receivers, like your Roberts, are designed and constructed to provide effective performance on anemic antennae. To make this work, the front end has to be quite sensitive. To meet a price point, manufacturers will cut corners. So, some assumptions are made about where and under what circumstances the radio will be used. Top of the list, is that high level signals are not expected to be encountered. So, high sensitivity input circuits are designed, with little room for the occasional high signal level that may never be encountered. These input circuits are usually run wide open, without provision for reducing input to prevent overload. Further savings are achieved by eliminating internal shielding between stages. What you end up with, is a receiver of high sensitivity that, under certain conditions, produces spurious signals up and down the dial.

If the spurious signals on your LW band are different on each radio, the problem is one or more local signals with enough signal strength to produce non linearities in the first RF stage, which produces mix products of multiple signals that appear on more than just your LW band. They'll likely be on SW, as well.

Eliminating these spurious signals may be as simple as reducing the amount of antenna available to your receiver.

But strong local signals can also get in to your receiver though other paths than the antenna. If you're powering your radio with an A/C adaptor, disconnect it, and run your radio on battery power. If that eliminates the spurious signals, you've isolated the path by which the problem signal gets into your radio. Ferrite cores on the DC line to your radio from the wall wart will reduce this signal. As will using a filtered, regulated power supply with an effective ground.

A little investigation will reveal what the offending signal is, and where it may be coming into your radios. With that, you can take measures to reduce spurious signals and enjoy your radio as it was intended to be enjoyed.

Your name was mentioned as an expert with the WinRadio G305.

What might it be comparable to ?

Worth the extra $ to move up to the G313, and give up the vhf/uhf (which I

Why should I waste my time arguing with a FOOL, boy?

Thank you for such an informative and interesting reply.

Can you suggest a good filtered power supply with an effective ground?

I use an AMT 3000 AM transmitter to broadcast vintage jazz records through my house (and up the street) over my restored tube radios, I've been dealing with an intermittent hum with the Zenith that sits on the counter in our kitchen.
(same location as the Roberts by the way)

The hum isn't really that bad, but if I could get rid of it that would be better!

Thanks again.

Hmm. I guess I have to decide how much I want/need SSB, as the CCrane (and related Redsun rebadgings) don't seem to have a built-in decoder for it, but other things at the price range do... Other than eavesdropping on Hams, does SSB have any real purpose?

Hi are you trying to DX AM? or Shortwave?

I love the Crane radios, I've had a CC Radio since 2000. On AM DX, I'm finding that the HD hash is making a noisy mess.

Here in the Ma, I was able to pull in WLW Cincinatti every night for years so clearly on my CC Radio, it was as if were a local station.For the last two years or so, I'm just getting a hash sound, unless atmospheric conditions are perfect.

On my restored tube radios, I use a Select A Tenna.

There are some wall warts with a ground tang on A/C plug. You'll have to search for them.

Any bench supply will work. That can cost.

I think you may have found your strong local signal. :) That signal will get into about everything through the A/C, and get re radiated by every metallic contrivance throughout your house.

You may find that moving the transmitter to a different location within your house may improve things audibly.

That will work. Pretty nice receiver just to keep it

Yup, a number of hits from Wall Street firms. Funny, how Price Waterhouse searched on "iBiquity IPO" just after this story was leaked
- wonder, if they are involved? Da!

It is now acceptable for the state-run media to joke about killing conservative leaders, including Former President Bush.
It’s funny.

"How Pandora Can Become the New Radio"

"The largest concern you should have is that Pandora's entry into the auto market - something I view as inevitable - has the potential to create a complete substitute for your (music-oriented) radio station. And this will happen much faster than you think."

http://tinyurl.com/yhc6q6x

"CBS buys Last.fm - and what it means"

"It is inevitable that radio - or aspects of radio - will become personalized. Instantly, the value of a huge 'variety' of channels or stations will be obliterated. Because ultimately nobody wants a hundred diverse channels or stations. They want THEIR one or two or three diverse channels or stations. A hundred stations is what you provide when technology limits you from doing better... Bad news for HD Radio. Bad news for Satellite Radio."

http://www.hear2.com/2007/05/cbs_buys_lastfm.html

"Slacker iPhone app now available, users go wild"

"All for free, on your iPhone. The definition of 'radio' is changing right before our eyes. And listeners know this. One review on iTunes calls the Slacker iPhone app the first killer radio app... not only does the Slacker app set the bar, but it changes things completely. Another reviewer says that words cannot express how awesome this app is, while yet another states that SiriusXM is in trouble."

http://tinyurl.com/7nyv46

Actually, adios music-oriented terrestrial radio. Let's see, do I want to be able to create my own customized "radio stations", or be force-fed someone else's crap programming on HD Radio. Slacker portable radio comes pre-loaded with music and is updated through Wifi hotspots - should be the same with Pandora. Pandora just killed the Radio Star - LOL!

I have that one also, the passive loop? Tried that with my boatanchors, HQ-145XC, and HE-30 and it produced zilch! Only the long wire works with them. The Select A Tenna works well with the CCrane, and with my old Knight StarRoamer.

Have you noticed that hash sound more and more?

Around 1977 I was staying with my Grandmother in Hallandale Florida, I picked up WBZ Boston.I was using a Lafayette Gaurdian 7000, that got in 1973. That radio is still playing like it did when it was new. I use it everyday.

My hobby is restoring vintage tube radios. I adore tube radios, I have 1946 Zenith 6D029 playing in the kitchen right now.

I use the Select A Tenna as a way to null the inference from the under the counter halogen lights.

I mentioned in a previous post that my gave me an all leather and wood Roberts Revival Radio. Very expensive. I planned to concoct an excuse to send it back, after I took it out the box, I fell in love with it. Usually I have no interest in anything repro, this radio picks up everything! It has a continuously back lighted dial even when its on batteries.
To me it all the qualities of a vintage radio. It really stands on its own.My wife got it from Crane. She saw me eyeing it in the catalog. Its a great DX'ng radio.

Yes, the interference is huge down here in South Florida, not so much where I am, only one mile from the ocean in a small coastal town.
Yes, those "revival" radios are neat! We got one, with a CD hidden under a hinged lid, a Crosley, with the old aircraft-style tuning dial, back lamp, cloth covered grill, etc. When playing 30's or 40's CDs, it is like a time machine, coming out of the speaker!
Have not tried it yet for "real" radio listening, have too many others!
Wish that I had an old Console Radio that my Grandparents had in the 30's and 40's, and that I still remember being in the living room. My Grandpa put it out beside the curb one day in the early 60's for the junk guy! Did the same thing with our 1952 RCA TV, beautiful cabinet, doors covering the set,etc. Out to the curb when he got a "new" 21" round tube GE Color TV, again in the early 60's. Breaks my heart now.

The Roberts R250 is made of real leather on wood, its stunning.Great sound. Some owners don't like the sound.

I'm in the process of restoring my aunts 1941 RCA console. She gave it to me when I was 15 back in 1970.

All the rotted rubber wires had to be replaced, I'm almost done with that part of it. My experience has been restoring simple AM table radios, this is the most complicated one I've done. I hope when I finally test it, I don't burn the house down.

I like just tuning around and seeing what I can trip over just like

Job Based and Wage Based Funding for a

A Universal Value-Added-Tax [VAT] that TAXES
both Domestic and Imported Products and Services Equally is the preferred and better way to Universally Fund and Pay for a Universal Health Care System
-and- the US Federal Government in general.

REALITY CHECK - Wage and Income Taxes are dumb, Dumb. DUMB ! for any Country that is a Net Importer of Products {Goods} and Services

1 - Abolish the US Federal Income Tax for 90%

2 - Flat Income Tax that is equal to the Value-

3 - Double Flat Income Tax that is Double the Value-Added-Tax [VAT] on everyone making
above $2.5 Million per Year {20%~30%} 4 - Triple Flat Income Tax that is Triple the above $25 Million per Year {30%~45%}

5 - Four-Times Flat Income Tax that is 4X the Value-Added-Tax [VAT] on everyone making

As others have pointed out, you are probably hearing images caused by receiver overload.

On the other hand, in the specific case of Radio Havana, I suppose anything is possible... which is to say that they might actually be unintentionally radiating in the LW band. When it comes to Cuba, nothing would surprise me

RHC transmitters are infamous for generating in-band and out-of-band spurious signals, and general RF garbage due to technical malfunctions of various kinds.

There is no "state run media" in the USA. Gore Vidal is really worn out.

Belief in God by Shaikh Shahidullah Faridi

It is mistakenly imagined by some that belief in a Supreme Being as the Creator and Controller of the universe is a mere emotional aspiration, a superstition of ancient times, irrational and illogical, and exploded by modern science. It is believed that scientists (physicists, biologists and others) have erected some theory which both refutes and replaces the traditional belief in God. Such ideas have only a very superficial grounding, and are the result of ignorance or an indifference to both the fundamentals of religious faith and the scope of the physical sciences. It is a significant fact in the history of world thought that very few people have ever made it their business to refute the existence of God. The views of the universe which are considered to be anti-religious are almost all agnostic, not atheistic, that is to say, they attempt to ignore the existence of God instead of denying it. This is true of certain views of modern science as well as of the ancient non-religious theories. The universe in which we live comprises an evident system of causes and effects, of phenomena and their results, and it is possible to discuss them indefinitely and construct theories about them, giving a superficial appearance of completeness. This is done, however, only at the expense of ignoring fundamentals or claiming that they cannot be known. If one were to search for a convincing statement based on firm principles that the existence of a Supreme Being is impossible, one would not be able to find it.
The reason for this state of affairs is that belief in God is at once instinctive, rational, evidential and intuitional, and it is only by deliberately neglecting to consider it that the non-religious attitude is maintained. It is instinctive in that man has an innate feeling of his own inadequacy and helplessness, which accompanies him from the cradle to the grave, a feeling accompanied by the complementary desire to seek refuge and support with a being who controls all those forces before which he feels himself inadequate. We put this feeling forward as instinctive, although it will immediately be perceived that it is also evidential. The weakness of man before all the uncountable influences over which he has no control is a fact so obvious as to require no discussion.

What is less well grasped by some who have claims to intelligence is that belief in God is fully supported by reason and logic, the principles on which all human intelligence stands. For instance, it is a basic requirement of reason that an effect cannot exist without a cause. However hard we press our mental faculties, we cannot conceive rationally of a causeless effect, and if we wish to postulate one we can only do so by temporarily putting our reason on the shelf. Reason leads us to the conclusion that just as the elements which compose the universe are effects of certain causes, the universe itself must be the effect of a cause, a cause which is itself mightier than and outside the universe. Non-religious thinkers have to ignore the origin of the universe and postulate something existing in the beginning without any known cause. This postulate is essentially non-rational and therefore unscientific, but it is a necessity for those thinkers who have unconsciously or deliberately decided not to consider fundamentals. Of these there are even some who openly proclaim their refusal to discuss or admit any metaphysical concept. This kind of attitude, however, can only be upheld by abandoning reason. Reason itself guides us inexorably to the conclusion that there is an ultimate cause, the Cause of causes, beyond this universe of time, space and change; in fact, a Supreme Being.

Another of the basic demands of reason is that diversity cannot exist without a fundamental unity. Whenever the human mind is confronted with diversity, it immediately sets to work to synthesise it into unities, then to synthesise these unities into higher unities and so on until it can go no further. The ultimate result of a rational consideration of diversity is to arrive at a unity of unities, a Supreme Unity, the producer of all diversities, but itself essentially One. Whichever fundamental of reason we select, if we follow its path we are led inevitably to the same goal - belief in God, the Supreme Being.

Besides the conclusion arrived at by purely rational processes, man is led to the belief in God by observation and experience. One of the principal reasons for man’s refusal to recognize the existence of God is the intellectual arrogance produced by his appreciation of his own powers of analysis and synthesis, of harnessing physical forces by his ingenuity, and of constructing complex machines to do his work for him. But pride is caused by concentrating too much attention on one’s own virtues and blinding oneself to one’s defects. What are the best of man’s mechanical inventions but a poor and crude imitation of what already exists in an infinitely finer form in nature? By copying in an elementary fashion some of the functions of the human eye, he has been able to evolve the camera; but what comparison has this machine, made out of lifeless materials, to the living stuff of the eye, and to the refinement, brightness, clarity, flexibility and stability of its vision, its immediate connection with the mind which sifts and appreciates all it sees, all without a complicated system and controls, and directly under the command of the human will? Take any organ of the body and study it - the heart, the brain - and it will immediately be obvious that it is quite outside the scope of man’s ability to conceive and fashion such an instrument. The petty imitations of man are attributed to his great cunning, artistry and intelligence. Is it then reasonable, logical or scientific to attribute the infinitely finer and more perfect instruments of nature to such vague and blind energies called by names such as the ‘life force', or 'matter in evolution', and leave them undescribed and unexplained? If logic has any validity (and if it has not we had better stop thinking altogether and become animals), the intelligence which conceived and wrought myriads of such delicate and astonishing devices must be infinitely superior to the human intelligence (even the human intelligence is one of its products), and have control of all the materials and workings of the universe. Such an intelligence can only be possessed by a Supreme Being, the Creator, Fashioner and Sustainer of all things.

If we ponder our own place in the world, we find that we (as well as all other beings) are kept in being by a most intimate combination of forces and conditions, which is so delicate that even a small dislocation would cause our total destruction. We live, so to speak, continually on the brink of annihilation, and yet are enabled to carry on our complex existences in comparative immunity. We cannot live, for instance, without daily rest; both the human body and the human mind are constructed to need it. This fact is not in itself surprising, but what is surprising is that the solar system collaborates with us in our human frailty and provides us with a day and a night exactly suited to our needs. Man cannot claim to have compelled or persuaded the solar system to do so; nor can the solar system claim to have modelled human physical and mental energy to conform to its own movements. Both man and the solar system are evidently linked in a total organisation in which man is the beneficiary; the organiser of these inexplicable concordances can only be a Supreme Controller of the universe and mankind. Sweet water is a necessary condition of human existence; it is equally necessary for those plants which produce man's staple foods, which themselves depend on each other. If sea water were to invade our rivers and wells or rain down from the sky, is there any doubt that we should all die of hunger and thirst in a few days and the whole world become an empty desert? Yet sea water is only held back by an invisible barrier over which we have no control, and the sun and the clouds co-operate in order to desalinate our water for us and so give us life. This linkage of interdependence and concurrence could be extended indefinitely by taking examples from the physical world, and to describe it as 'fortuitous' is only begging the question; moreover it is a contradiction in terms. Fortuity is the name for something which does not come within any known system or regulation, an apparently meaningless and haphazard occurrence. To call a system which is a balanced and cohesive organization fortuitous is obviously self-contradictory and fallacious. A 'fortuitous system' is, simply, an absurdity. If we observe carefully we can see that the whole of the universe is interdependent and interlinked and therefore not fortuitous but planned. Belief in God means, precisely, belief in a Planner of the universe.

A basic element in human consciousness - a suprarational element - is a sense of value and purpose in respect to life. Even the worst of men is prevented from becoming completely bestial by this feeling, and in the best of them it dominates their whole existence. The senses of good and evil, right and wrong, beauty and ugliness, fitness and unfitness, truth and falsehood are such that however attacked by the missiles of constructive analysis, they remain intact within their intuitional fortress. In all ages and conditions, man has not been able to divest himself of the idea that behind its external effect, every action possesses a quality by which it may be judged and graded in the scale of final values. In addition to the consciousness of the existence of these values, there is the feeling that it is the purpose of man's life to attain those qualities which reflect the highest of them, that not only are they excellent in themselves and worthy of being acquired, but that they must be acquired, and that he has been created to acquire them. The natural sense of qualitative purpose, if allowed to develop freely without the cramps of agnostic prejudice, leads him to the conception of an absolute good and an absolute truth as the ultimate standard of human existence, and from there (for a quality cannot exist except in a being who is qualified by it) to a being who is the possessor and author of these qualities, the Supreme Purposer.

The decisive vindication of the existence of God is evidential. At various junctures in world history and in widely distant places, certain men have arisen and proclaimed that they have been inspired by God to give His message to mankind. These men were not mad; we have historical records of several of them, including all or part of the message they insisted that they were called to deliver, and it is obvious that they were men who were intellectually and morally highly impressive. They did not come all at once so that we could attribute them to a sort of historical fashion. They came spaced throughout history usually at a time of great moral degeneration. If we examine their message, we find that apart from differences of expression, attributable to the milieu in which they lived, they not only bear remarkable similarities but are basically identical. They have stated that God had conversed with them in some inspirational manner, and had ordered them to proclaim His Existence as the Creator, Maintainer, Controller and eventual Destroyer of the world, to describe His Mercy and Justice, and to warn mankind that it is only by remembering and worshipping Him and following the moral and practical principles that He has laid down for them that they can achieve success and happiness here and hereafter.

The last of these prophets was Muhammad of Mecca, who stated that there would be no prophet after him, and it is a demonstrable historical fact that no-one has been able to establish a claim to prophethood since. Now those who discuss or refuse to discuss the existence of God almost invariably rely on rational or anti-rational arguments and rarely, if ever, consider the evidential factor. The two basic elements in human knowledge are, firstly, our own observations and conclusions, and secondly, the evidence of others. Among the branches of knowledge the whole of history, for example, and most of the average man's acquaintance with science, are only known from the evidence of others, unless he himself is a specialist in the subject.

When specialists in a certain branch of knowledge continuously assert that a certain thing is a fact, it becomes a necessity for the rest of mankind, who are unable to acquire this knowledge directly, to accept it as such. In the field of direct inspiration from God, and knowledge of His qualities and works, we have the repeated evidence of people in history who have affirmed their apprehension of Him and that they have been charged with conveying His message; not only that, the realities of the divine and spiritual realism as described by these prophets have in various degrees been corroborated and confirmed by the spiritual experiences of an uncounted number of their followers right up to the present day. These corroborators have been the saints and mystics of their various communities. This continuous and widespread evidence of the existence of God, the central and original evidence of prophets, and the derivative and confirmatory evidence of their followers, all based on modes of direct and intuitional perception of His Being, cannot with any reasonability be denied or ignored. To deny or ignore them is patently illogical and unscientific, and against the basic principles of the acquirement and dissemination of human knowledge. In addition to being instinctive, intuitional, and logical, belief in God has irrefutable evidence to prove its verity.

The writer (1915-1978) was an English convert to Islam who became a Shaykh of the Tariqa Chishtiyya, living a life of simplicity in Karachi, Pakistan, where his holiness gained him the love and devotion of thousands of Muslims from all walks of life. May Allah show him His mercy, and grant him light in his grave. Amin.

That may be the problem. I used the built-in antenna until my cat umped off my dresser and knocked the radio over, breaking off the antenna and now I just use an old wire...

I still have those feelings. The new radios seem to be "appliances" rather than radios. Nothing beats sitting up late in a dark room with the old tube radios glowing, feeling the heat from the tubes, turning the dials slowly, and THEN getting a DX station!

Why? Glenn Beck seems to be one of the most credible commentators on TV. He even dares the White House to refute his allegations. Of course, the WH can't because Beck's allegations are true.

Who do you like, that goofy looking androgenous guy who's show airs right after Olbermann's Sarah Palin Bashathon on MSNBC?

YOU are correct.

Lare is wrong (a condition he is not unfamiliar with).

But then, it's the weekend, and well, you know, he sorta...ahem...shall we say, sometimes gets a little too friendly with that fire water.

Or, on the other hand...he could be saying it "tongue in cheek", trying to fish in the newbies. ;-)

Your pick.

I'm glad there is a thread on the Roberts. When Crane sent me their newest catalogue....that was the radio that caught my eyes.

But it sounds like from CF that it has overload problems? What type of filtering does that piece have?

It definitely looks sharp but I don't make a radio purchase based on just looks.

Yep. That is the ultimate setup, can't beat it. I don't have that particular antenna, don't need it but any loop with a turntable is where it's at.

I use my GE SR II on a turntable.

Well, sure, for a given value of "communist jack boot on their neck":
in this case meaning "a centrist liberal ballet slipper abandoned somewhere near them".

And BTW: it's "jack-boot". (If you're going to be a proper jack-booted-thug, you've got to start getting those little things right.)

Mr. Beck may seem credible, but he's a trained radio performer with smooth authoritative delivery.

What allegations are you talking about?

What you don't understand is that a majority of your fellow citizens put
Mr. Obama in office to shake things up, and to stop the REAL fascists from dismantling America. Personally, I think Mr. Ayers and the Reverend Mr. Wright are true Americans. Moderation in the defense of liberty is no virtue.

You could learn a lot from Rachel Maddow, she's scary smart.

BTW: I get my news from the World Service, just like Pappy Bush.

Ha, ain't gonna happen. ;-) A great setup for that particular piece though is to either make or buy your own table. There is nothing to it, if I can do it (trust me) anyone can.

By that I mean, just have the table part itself rotate while the pole/legs don't move. That's what I have and IMO is my main piece for my BCB DX setup. If I would have thought before I finished it - - I would have included a ballbearing collar where the table sits atop the pole but it never crossed my mind. But it rotates smoothly enough now the way it is with no grab, I can just picture it now with a ballbearing collar, sweet.

What I fund amusing, is that everytime I post, you counter-post with nothing but personal attacks. Your lack of understanding of technology is readily apparent.

Apparently, they are, including most of the other major firms, including iBiquity investor JP Morgan.

Personally I'd like to keep Halloween apolitical. I'll agree not to inflict my left-of-center, just-shy-of-Marxist beliefs on you, if you'll agree not to inflict your right-of-center, just-shy-of-fascist beliefs on me. I think everybody prefers candy to politics (or at least most sane people do)

It would be nice to see an HD 'build your own' from Radio Shack.
Never gonna happen.
Understanding a technology and wanting it are two very different things.

The Zune HDs are no longer in Amazon'ss top-100, and Ford owns Volvo and is an investor in iBiquity. Funny, those HD radios never showed up in Ford dealerships, since 2007. They are shipping those defective, over-priced HD radios onto its Volvo unit, wher consumers won't notice the price increases in those expensifve, luxery Volvos. Withoput that -10db power increase, Struble the scammer can forget the automakers.

National Panasonic Jewelry Case Radio

That is what I call it anyway, a jewelry case radio.I bought it years ago at a Goodwill store.It is an AM radio and red and silver color, has a flip up top, the plastic tuning knob is missing, it was missing when I bought the radio.There is some corrosion on the battery contact thingys.The radio appears to be in fair to good cosmetic and physical condition.I think it is a Model R-8, the part of the label that probally said 8 is missing.I will clean up the battery contacts and see if it works.It takes three AA batteries.

Isn't there somebody in this newsgroup who collects those kind of little radios?

How long have you been on Usenet, anyway?...

Here's something the left-of-center will find funny (if not infuriatingly on-point), and the right-of-center won't get:

And, in the interest of fairness, here's something the other side will find equally amusing and thought-provoking:

(I don't have anything specifically suitable to shortwave radio, whatever the reason is for it being included in this thread...sorry)....r

Like DRM, HD would require a licensing fee for the decoding algorithm. "Build Your Own" would have to come in a pre licensed kit form. 'The Shack' is interested in serving neither the market for kit builders, nor the HD radio market enough to take on that cost.

Like all SCA in the late 60's and early 70's, HD is a novelty to those with the kit building mentality, and not of any real substance. I built an SCA adaptor kit back then. It was amusing to hook into the back of my 10 transistor FM radio and get something other than the baseband audio, but never provided any serious listening. Just about everyone had one of those SCA adaptor kits in their catalogs back then. And Popular Electronics, and Popular Science had instructions for rolling your own. Never caught on.

You are confusing UTC/GMT with the time used in the UK. While the usual time used in England, Wales and Scotland is the same as GMT, in the summer they switch to BST (British Summer Time).

Didn't the switch from BST to GMT take place last weekend (October

Hi,

It was not my intention to go on and on about the Roberts R250, but as I said I was going to concoct an excuse to return it as to not insult my wife, it was a birthday present. After taking out of the box, and using it, I had to keep it. No way was I sending it back. Mine is blue

Not everyone agrees, but I like the sound it has. It has an old tube radio sound.

Yes, its just a radio..but in this case looks did matter and it performs. Its very sensitive on AM and FM. I'd rather they provided a Shortwave band instead of the the LW, but I've been goofing around with that.

The back lighted dial stays lighted continuously. A really nice feature in a portable radio.

You're asking a lot. Many of the folks here are incapable of choosing on their own, as they'd much rather have Obama choose for them!

And hey, don't forget to set your GMT clock back tonight!

That's exactly why I generally go to bed with the GE SR I playin' low by my side.

I got's it on WLS 890 where I get's infused by Hannity, Levin, and after the ghost hunter crap is over I get's da Midnight Truckin' crew.

I get's infused, baby!

Not a big surprise...

The dxDufus normally lives in a state of confusion. Anyway, you would think one who has been in the game as long as Lare and who claims to be an "ace" wouldn't make such a basic error.

Hmmm...maybe that means he's NOT such an "ace".

I used to have a Bearcat DX-1000 Communications Receiver that easily tuned 67 KHz. You just tap the baseband AF (between Detector and Stereo Demodulator).

GMT is a "Reference" time and does not change. Every other timezone has an "offset" to the reference (GMT) and the offset for British Winter

Yes, you are correct. My friends in the UK are now 11 hours behind us as we are on AEST and they have just come off BST either last weekend or the weekend before. The time difference plays merry hell with our Skype

It's a bit like countries that call themselves the "Democratic Republic

DX Ace is about as far from being an ace as it is possible to get and he

Yes, exactly Brenda Ann. Lump in health care with that pursuit of happiness clause. If it makes you happy to have health care then go out and pursue a job that compensates well enough and pay for it yourself. Don't take my hard earned money away from me in order to pay for your gosh darn health care. You go to school and study hard and you will do well. If a person is developmentally challenged then no problem, we all chip in and take care of him/her. If the person fucked off in school and never studied then he gets what he deserves - no health care.

This is why I hate the shack, they killed the competition and rather than buy parts when you walk in a sales 'person' tries to sell you something you don't want. I just say something seriously technical and the kid runs to look it up. Heathkit, Eico, Conar (televisions), Lafayette, and more were somewhat healthy into the mid to late 1960's when a little thing called radio shack came along and catered to the lazy Americans who stopped buying parts and went to the shack.

Phone line as SW antenna
Bill McFadden

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \ or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

Didn't they make furniture like that in the '50s? Coffee tables with huge lazy susans on it for moving around bowls of snacks?

During the brief period between the dawn of digital and the mobile internet, SCA provided "last mile" data delivery in real time for products like Quotrek (the one on the left).

You know, people have been building their own playlist for years by hitting the scan button. The concept isn't a new one. Like everything else, old technology is replaced by new concepts that simply perform better, in the eyes of the beholder.

AOL built their brand/business around dial-up service. Some customers still love dial up today. But as DSL continued to price drop, dial-up became far less attractive. Broadband users aren't hip, new adapters, 18-24's or anything else. They're you and me!

Have you notice the price and service trends with cell phone companies? $50.00 buys you unlimited text, phone and web usage. And I'd expect this trend to continue with price points...

Pandora, customized radio in the car, is available to everyone! I'm 49, and still enjoy new music. Sites like ourstage.com, have opened up a huge portal to more new new music, that I'll never hear on radio.

I also feel that listening to a strangers playlist, is akin to using dial up service. Dial up service failed because it couldn't adapt to the new world.

History repeats itself, only if you let it!
It's just so dam obvious and sad to anyone willing to open their eyes.

I have a lot of old, old, old, wind up clocks and electric clocks.One of them I am looking at right now is small, but it is very heavy, it says,
The Measuregraph Company
St.Louis.U.S.A.

Another old clock I have is what I think is called a Watchman's Clock, it is inside of a leather case. A Watchman, or a Guard, would make his rounds, doing Guard duty.He would go from place to place and insert a key into the clock and turn the key so as to prove he wasen't sleeping on the job.Another old clock I have is a Hotel clock.There are a lot of little levers (which can be slid back and forth) all around the dial of the clock.

I have more old clocks (and quite a few old wristwatches) and old radios and many other kinds of weird old thingys than you can shake a stick at, and that is the Truth.

Or will you simply pack you grocery cart and leave willingly? I drought

About a year ago, I watched a tv program about India.There is a great big giant Sun Dial in India which is about a thousand years old, (more or less, I forget just how old the guy said that Sun Dial is) that Sun Dial is still accurate today within two seconds.

Sun Dials are fascinating.I like Sun Dials.

1912 The Children's Burea

1921 The Infancy and Maternity Protection Act of 1921

1935 The Social Security Act (1939, 1950, and other amendments)

1944 GI Bill

1956 Disability amendments to SSI

1962 thru 1992 Aid to Dependent Children (Welfare) (in twenty five years widowers went from 80% of recipients to 10%?) Kennedy and his "New Frontier" (always some catchy phrase "you can believe in", to distract you from the economic failures?)

1964 Economic Opportunity Act (with the "Poverty Czar") (ambitious politicians assume millions of Americans want to work, and they don't, otherwise Job Corps would have eliminated unemployment?)

1964 Food Stamp Act

1965 Social Security Amendments

1970 Unemployment Insurance (after realizing Americans are lazy, this was invented to get people to vote?) The AFL-CIO had its hands all over this?

1972 Social Security COLA/WIC

1975 Employer Welfare Act (Earned Income Credit) a program that raised the minimum wage by a sliding scale with the government giving the "minimum raise" and calling it something totally different. Also approved largely because of the intense debate over the "Tax Reduction Act" they didn't have the energy to debate this on the floor of the House?"

1988 thru 1994 Welfare reform (the Family Support Act)

By 1994, 14.2 million Americans were on AFDC, roughly 10% of the work force? Aren't Democrat priorities just great? (Meanwhile evil Americans were feeding plants Co2, a registered pollutant)

2000 Seniors Right to Work Act. Yes, more amendments to Social Security. You know why? Because seniors outnumber poor high school drop outs by 10 to 1? So they always dominate the political agenda? And the Democrats are guess what, throwing seniors under the bus?

Left out is the general discussion of wasteful public spending projects, preventable taxes, and of course, Time Magazine, which based entire issues dedicated to global climate change simply based on one set of numbers, from the United Nations?

Don't take my word for it, check all the sources used at Time Magazine, who did they use? What pictures did they use? Why did they use those pictures? Should we call state troopers in Missouri, and say that Time magazine is lying, when it uses questionable comparisons regarding ideological discussions based on emotions rather than facts?

But you know what I like best about Time Magazine? Is when they lament that the Earth only has less than 3% fresh water, and that population problems will abound, and then God gives them several pages to write about disasters related to guess what? Fresh water flooding?

Yes, I agree, man is lazy? Gee what did people do before 1912, go to church, get to know their neighbors and help out?

All right, with that background, lets look at what the hope of Harry wrote?

This is complete projection.

Dylan as do most conservatives completely ignore the past 8 years.

(incoherent, I have no idea what Dylan means)

It was Bush Cheney that took us from $5 Trillion in debt to $11 Trillion in debt.

(No spending comparison rates, only summaries, and no justification or result summaries)

It was Bush Cheney that took a budget surplus and gave it to the wealthy elite in the form of massive tax breaks.

Corporate Welfare was rampant under the Bush Cheney regime with hundreds of billions of dollars handed out in the form of cost plus no bid contracts to the likes of Halliburton, KBR, and BlackWater USA.

(No one else could do the job? Who would you have selected to bid?)

Nearly every major U.S. Department was stacked with a Loyal Bushy and directed to basically deregulate where possible and do anything to be more corporate friendly.

From the EPA to the FDA to the CPA to the BLM we witnessed the efficacy of the Federal Government eroded.

(incoherent)

This came to a head during Hurricane Katrina with Heckuva Job Brownie at FEMA.

(Bush wanted to rebuild the death trap, which I fiercely oppose)
Many poor could not evacuate based on Democrat utopian metro designs that revolved around mass transit (when those systems stopped, they were all trapped)

Corporate bailouts started under Bush Cheney Republicans.

(which does not mean they should have been done at all)

Ronald Reagan ushered in the era of "break government" that has been championed by Grover Norquist.

The conservative dream has been to make the government so bloated and inefficient that it eventually collapses.

This started under Reagan who said "The nine most terrifying words in the English language are: 'I'm from the government and I'm here to help.'"

Reagan added trillions to our National Debt.

This continued under Bush I.

Under Clinton with a Republican Congress there was an effort to get the deficit under control.

(What took them off track?)

(Democrats infiltrated the Republican Party and began their new era of confusion?)

Bush Cheney were the ones who tried to undermine government by making it more inefficient, less beneficial to The People, and by spending as much money as possible.

(A more effecient government is one that does less? Every page of legislation can put another person in jail?)

It was all by design.

Resistance if futile, you must comply.....with the truth!

Can you smell el el el el el el el el el .....what the Rock of Truth, who has the smartest eyebrow in the Universe, and the whitest teeth known to man, is .....cooking?

Being that this is the most exciting, most entertaining, fact finding, brain busting, fun loving, liberal egg shell mind crunching, invincible smacketh downeth erectus among us, you can't see the truth coming, but you know it is anyway, sonic boom of Conservatism, and, most powerful keyboard in the world,

Do you feel lucky?

I didn't say there was a surplus, isn't it fun being right? How long was it before they had to recant that claim? There will never be a surplus, because someone would simply spend it before it appeared? The right will just give a tax cut, and the left will not want to admit it because all the Euro Pee in Your Dreams will accuse you of raping the planet, and then come up with some social experiment that trashes the economy all over again?

Millions of Americans do NOT want to work. Get used to it. Leave the rest of us that WANT TO WORK, WANT TO SUCCEED, ALONE!

How did Jesus say that, let the dead bury the dead?

What good are the numbers when they are distorted by government spending programs? Claims that $4500 car rebates cost taxpayers $24K? That's absurd. Giving people $8K to buy a house, and that costs taxpayers $46K? With that kind of "social spending" you could give away cars that cost less than $10K and liveable RV trailers that don't require financing?

They want to "bulldoze neighborhoods", erect solar and wind electric generation plants in hurricane and other storm prone areas (it's either hurricanes, tornadoes, or flooding?) Coal and gas are the most dependable forms of cheap energy, and they want us to go broke trying to pay for it next year?

But that is why Republicans and Democrats don't want Conservatives in public office, they want to give their deep pocket campaign finance donors big concessions, even if it wrecks the economy?

Those numbers are absurd, and I suspect someone pulled them out of their

The neighborhoods in question are derelict and abandoned, a burden to the cities they are in. Why not replace hundreds of square miles of rotting and empty tenements with parks, green industry areas, and public transit? As for coal and gas, they are killing us. For all the wet diaper contingent of the GOP whines about the cost, the cost of global warming itself is going to be far greater.

Pretty much, yeah. "Conservative" is either a loon or an industry whore. Neither do us much good.

The cost of the Status Quo has been higher than the cost of reform ever since Henry Ford's early electric car shop mysteriously blew up.

We pay those costs now, in all kinds of environmental degradation, bad health, premature death. Oh, and endless wars around the Oil States.

The Global Warming fearmongering only describes the end game. That cost would indeed be greater still.

God already created the perfect carbon capturing device. It is called a plant.

Yeah, sure, lets bury an invisible gas, in concentrated amounts, and when Dr. Evil decides to exterminate the city, he can just open a valve, or blow something up, and millions of Japs will just sufficate from an invisible gas?

Idiots.

There is a way to clean up these coal plants, and it will two or three decades before that technology is developed? I can think of several ways of doing it, of course, why should I even bother if people just expect you to give away the information?

Why shouldn't I just let them drive out the coal business, and then when the mines are dirt cheap, and I have perfected my clean burning (and mining) technology, I can buy up all the mines on earth right now for pennies on the dollar?

Or was that Donald Trump's plan? And of course it all depends on people believing Time Magazine, and chanting for my vote, and being a high school drop out, who will be angry in a few years because every body had their lights turned out because of high costs? They will be glad to see me go in business after a few storms wipe out the wind farms and solar panel farms?

And then some ego maniac will be viewed as the savior of their pathetic nightmare that others created? Humans, so predictable and boring?

No personal information exchanged will be shared without your consent, or provided to third parties with out the express permission of the parties and, or, individuals concerned.

b) The author(s) of this content and those who may interact with it in various known or unknown electronic methods do not give permission to any third parties to share or provide private personal information who may operate as part of the internet communications system, including all parties, who may technically intercept communications due to the nature of network conditions beyond both the author's legal and physical control, unless those communications represent violations of the law, upon which the author, and or web site will cooperate to pursue any legal remedies.

c) The views expressed by the author or website may or may not contain factual information, due to the use of sarcasm or parody. The views may or may not be complete, either by design, to pre-empt being called a liar even if telling the truth, or by error due to typographical, grammer, or other technical communication problems not realized or imagined, or the possibility of views based on false or missing information, or with the intention of being used for entertainment purposes only, and not as a definitive judgement on the actions, character, or reputation of an organization, individual, or groups of individuals, with the intent of communicating with a limited group of people, and not the general public, however no distribution restrictions apply for fair use purposes described by the US Copyright Office, if no other restrictions are present or communicated, with all commercial proceeds associated with the distribution of the content to remain the sole possesion of the original author.

d) Any humor if used, is not intended to offend people, and may be designed to apply the principals of peer pressure through reverse examination to accomplish the communication of principals or ideas that consist of traditional or proposed social values that are proven to advance the common good, and are not meant to discredit, disparage or demean any person or entities in any professional or personal manner, by attempting to share through the eyes or opinion of the author, for which it is expected that you read at your own risk, with no liability held to the author or any third parties who may store, transfer, or forward this message to others, in the traditions of free speech, fair use, and to play a positive role in a society that believes that graphically depicting male homosexuals having sex, and other unusual sex acts is considered free speech or that the use of abortion to limit Negros, Latinos, and other races from "spreading the wealth around" as a "matter of privacy" (which the author does not condone).

e)The use of humor is a known ingredient in providing teachable moments, and to validate and even demonstrate artistic expressions that are not shared by others, as demonstrated by many valuable scientific observations that were scoffed at in the past, yet proven to be quite valid decades later, upon which the humor used in all electronic communications by the author are based, in the principals and traditions of free speech and pursuit of happiness, and may not be a representation of others, including God.

h) It is the opinion of the author that effective 1 December, 2009, the proposed regulations from the FTC violate the first and fifth amendments of the United States Constitution, by infringing through economic affliction the burden without compensation all financial details concerning the communications of both free enterprise and opinion, and other civil rights such as "punishment must be fair" and not at the "discretion" of public officials, or that advertisers are assumed to be guilty of deception when United States law provides that you are innocent before being proven guilty, and are in fact demonstrations that there are current members of Congress that neither understand the spirit of the law our founding fathers made for the United States of America, or understand how they work in the opinion of the author, as of October 10th, 2009, especially in light of anticipated, and hopefully defeated, legislative taxes relating to energy use and the burden of publishers and advertisers to comply with the law and manage the environment, and in light that there are various consumer protection agencies, including the Better Business Bureau, which has free consumer information.

i)Although the content provided meets or exceeds those new requirements to the knowledge of the author, and modifications to version 1.3 of this disclaimer is a result of the opinion of the author that blogging is another definition for a potentially infinite number or forms of electronic communication, as such the author will retroactively apply this version, 1.4 to all forms of previous communications, when and wherever possible, as time allows, in order to properly convey the intention of the author and to demonstrate an enthusiasm to comply with the law, and not enthusiastically pursue getting high on cocaine as often as possible as Barack Hussein Obama has admitted in his book (paraphrase, synopsis), according to (mmm, mmm, mmm (sonic emphasis)) Rush Hudson Limbaugh, (mmm mmm mmm (sonic emphasis)).

Olbermann's favored tactic is to show a clip of Beck making an on-air statement and then follow it up with another clip where Beck says exactly the opposite of what he said in the first clip. (Alas for the fruitcake right, Beck is prone to doing that sort of thing rather often.)

So while I don't know what the White House may have done to discredit Glenn Beck, I do know that there's someone out there who's disproven many of the things he's said, and that man's name is Glenn Beck.

Yes, he's spending money...but you may want to look at the reason WHY so much is being spent.

It just might have something to do with trying to dig us out from the two bogus 'wars' and from the Depression that he (we) inherited from W.

Mr. Beck claims to be aligned with the founding revolutionaries. Does he know the Boston Tea Party was a demonstration against corporatism, and a government who played the corporation against the People?

Do you know anything about the English East India Company?

Does Mr. Beck know his hero Thomas Paine was an ATHEIST?

But you are not alone. You are part of a society. If that society is failing some it will fail all, eventually. Either you are one out of many or you aren't, but to be an American means to feel an affinity for other Americans, no matter what your superficial differences.

Success is doing what you like and getting paid for it. Maybe the people in your example need a little vocational help.

But interring nuclear waste in rock formations is perfectly safe?

A plant releases its captured CO2 when it dies. Now a GIANT REDWOOD is one hell of a carbon sink because it's the size of a destroyer and lives thousands of years. People want to turn them into patio furniture and

The only problem is that we are producing far more CO2 than the plant kingdom can handle. That's why the carbon Levels are half again what they were a century ago.

Japan won't be doing the underground sequestering thing because the entire country is a major earthquake zone.

America’s first and most fundamental freedom is under concerted attack...

This is a month in which the president of the United States has co-sponsored a UN resolution with the police state of Egypt to ban speech that defames religion; a month in which the Democratic Party has placed an amendment on a defense appropriations bill to make anti-gay speech a thought crime, and in which the White House has launched an all-out attack on the Fox News Channel because it didn’t like what Fox commentators were saying. And instead of reacting with appropriate horror at an assault on the free press not seen since the days of Joseph McCarthy, a leading “liberal” pundit, TIME columnist Joe Klein has called Fox’s behavior “seditious” and thus helped to set the stage for making criticism of government a “hate crime.”

The CSM had a followup on that Edmunds story that included this interesting tidbit:
Mike Jackson, CEO of AutoNation, the country’s largest new-car dealer chain, agrees with the White House’s tough response, calling the Edmunds’ study “uncharacteristically shoddy,” according to USA Today.

“Simply put, they’ve misrepresented the facts, and the White House is completely justified in calling them out on it,” Mr. Jackson said.

Additionally, there are direct links, both to Edmunds and the CEA. It

It looks like they're trying to prevent violence and discourage extremely immature and foolish behavior.

I see no harm in banning public speech that defames religion, or that makes it illegal to make anti-gay (hate) speeches in public.

I pity those who fondly imagine that their religion is the "only way" as well as those who want to pick on people who are different from them.

Some people think that they can elevate themselves by putting others down and by picking fights.

What the world needs is love, not hate. Peace not war. Tolerance not divisiveness.

2885. Question about the wars in this world (cnr jamming or not??)

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave

From: user <dag@allemaale.be>

I have a (Japanese) source, which calls China National Radio a jamming station:
http://users.fulladsl.be/~spb13810/radio/txlistaoki/CNR1Jamming/index.htm

Now, look at the time list, and who they're so called jamming for http://users.fulladsl.be/~spb13810/radio/timelistaoki/12/index.htm

15495 1200-1230 1234567 D ADVENTIST WORLD R. English 90 250 Wertachtal
15495 1230-1300 1234567 D ADVENTIST WORLD R. Bengali 90 250 Wertachtal

Is my Japanese source still at war with the Chinese??
Maybe he's just a fan of AWR.

I have bought fine radio's from the Japanese and the Chinese as well, so it's a bit difficult to choose ... ;-)

I might rename this station "CNR1", after asking them to make a car radio with shortwave in it ... for true competition, if you believe in it ...

Then why are they letting Fox News broadcast live from the brand new U.S.S. New York attack ship thingy this week? Must be a double-secret all-out attack.

Republican candidates who are running for City council in many cities this year are not putting their party affiliation on their literature.
Some cities have changed the ballot to not include the party affiliation printed next to the candidates.

Seems it's an embarrassment to be republiCAN'T now!

How funny!

KINSTON, N.C. | Voters in this small city decided overwhelmingly last year to do away with the party affiliation of candidates in local elections, but the Obama administration recently overruled the electorate and decided that equal rights for black voters cannot be achieved without the Democratic Party.

So we should all start contacting Homeland Security because the leadership of US members of Congress expects to basically vote on something they have not read and understand?

1900 pages = less than one minute to read, let alone comprehend a bill? This is the most irresponsible thing I have ever seen?

Under a 72 hour bill, at five minutes a page, the bill should be no longer than 288 pages? What is the average rate of time per page in the civilian court system, for reviewing various legal cases?

They don't give a crap if they have our support or not do they?

If I have four hours on the weekend (the most the average American would dedicate to reading political attire?) that would be at most 48 pages? So that should take approximately 10 months for a citizen who only has part time attention span to tackle this?

A lot can happen in ten months?

In 2002, corporations donated over 4 billion dollars to environmental organizations? Gee, I wonder what that number is today?

Part of society? Really? When you are not left alone, when you are not given the freedom to bounce around within the boundaries, you are not a part of society, you are a prisoner. They tried the Job Corps for almost five years, and then they implemented welfare because people do not want to be told what to do. Millions of Americans do not want to work, and it makes little sense to shoot yourself in the foot because you refuse to admit that we are surrounded by idiots. Giving away money can remove your need and ability to use patience?

So yes, I have a deep affinity for idiots, by describing how stupid they are in as many ways as I can possibly think of, to humiliate them, to motivate them to stop blaming others for their problems, when ever they ask to so humiliated or communicated to. Perhaps you are describing the word "patience" by "superficial differences", and I have a deep affinity for those who refuse to use patience, by calling them stupid (which I am frequently guilty of, not being patient).

Oh, and success is not doing what you want to do. Sometimes you have to do what people pay you to do, and it is only a deep drug induced coma to suggest that society will reward everyone who just does whatever they feel like doing. That is ideological insanity. You can experiment with that process, but there are no guarantees, yet there is always something to be done, and we are surrounded by wealth. Leadership requires that we overcome the idiots who do not understand this process, and create the successful way to the future.

That's an ideological hard reach considering that all crooks get caught, even in China. If China was so well "centrally regulated" then why does it export? Crooks always think they are smarter than the other guy, don't they?

So what came first, the freedom, or the planning? The Chicken, or the Egg?

No the crooks never have to defend their ideology, they just want to make us all their prisoners?

Guess we got to get "edge you micated." (playing dumb is the first rule of knowing your opposition?)

I just "sampled" the G3 at my local Radio Shack and even took it outside to use! Had to leave my cell phone as hostage!
This is the improved version with the SYNC upgrade and it did very good on the SW broadcast with the SYNC. The SYNC even worked well in tuning SSB amateur on 75 meter and 40 meter! I believe this is much better than the G6 Buzz Aldrin edition by about three times!! Did not try the RDS or AIR band but that is not what I would want the rig for.
I was going to buy the G6 but now my focus is the "new" G3!

Could it be, maybe it's because you are posting the same things over and over again...and you don't respond to the criticism presented.

Posting the same thing over and over again makes you a pain in the ass. So don't be surprised at the responses you get, regarless of what side you are on.

Ignoring the counter argument, means you are not seriously involved in the discussion, ergo, the responses you get.

One word hit and run answer just add to the noise, so thats what you get in respnse.

Being the usenet gnat, usually just gets you swatted. thinking that all you have to do is shout-down someone you dont agree...or beat them over the head with countless posts with makes people not take you seriously.

BTW...I don't think what he wrote is a "personal attack". You have bragged about the numerous hits your blog gets.
He's commenting on how people might be bemused by someone who continually seeds the newsgroups with hit and run anonymous posts...extolling his own opinions....which might lead people to check out your blog links to find out more about you (as I did).

I was surprised to see you offer no clue as to who you are, where you've worked, or anything else that would validate your opinions that you are trying to force feed usenet. Is that a peersonal attack? No, it's an honest observation.

11790 CHINA RADIO INT (via Cuba) at 2345 English, OM ancr. Talk about living in harmony w/ our planet. Mention made of Individual Social Responsibility (ISR). VG signal. // 5990 G signal.

Remarks: I'm using a reel antenna much like the Kaito AN-03L or Sangean ANT-60. I've only 23" of wire to work with so it's not much. At this particular outdoor setting I find only marginal improvement over the telescopic. In many cases the whip provides for a cleaner reception. However, the wind-up results show a slight increase in signal strenght. I'm still working on perfecting this antenna's location. Conditions at the park make it difficult to position the antenna and its height is not high at all. I'm working on finding an alternative which will involve a much longer antenna. I'd appreciate any suggessions posters may have. On the positive side, it's great being outdoors in a park setting. Today's Vegas temperature was a pleasant 83. And my little Kaito gives an outstanding performance using only the whip.

Richard Bianchino, Las Vegas, NV USA. Kaito KA1103, 20' wind-up antenna.

Before the world wide web there was World Band Radio.

You have the right idea. Spreading out more wire may add more trouble than it’s worth in a public park. Height and orientation should not have any role since the wire antenna is short. Just getting away from the local interference is a blessing on it's own.

Michael Moore is not a hypocrite. He may just be sincerely misguided.

Yes, he has made millions of dollars from his documentaries which attack the profit motive of the capitalist system, and this does indeed look like the most embarrassing irony for him. But when you understand him, or at least when you understand his misunderstanding of capitalism, you will see that he is not in fact consciously contradicting himself. He is merely a victim of a common but very subtle economic fallacy that has afflicted societies since ancient times.

In “The Economic Organization of a P.O.W. Camp” in Economica, November, 1945, R.A. Radford describes how an economy evolved and the emergence of the middleman in an allied POW camp in WW-II:

“...More interesting was opinion on middlemen and prices. Taken as a whole, opinion was hostile to the middleman. His function, and his hard work in bringing buyer and seller together, were ignored; profits were not regarded as a reward for labor, but as the result of sharp practices. Despite the fact that his very existence was proof to the contrary, the middleman was held to be redundant in view of the existence of an official Shop and the Exchange and Mart. Appreciation only came his way when he was willing to advance the price of a sugar ration, or to buy goods spot and carry them against a future sale. In these cases the element of risk was obvious to all, and the convenience of the service was felt to merit some reward. Particularly unpopular was the middleman with an element of monopoly, the man who contacted the ration wagon driver, or the man who utilized his knowledge of Urdu. And middlemen as a group were blamed for reducing prices. Opinion notwithstanding, most people dealt with a middleman, whether consciously or unconsciously, at some time or another.

“There was a strong feeling that everything had its "just price" in cigarettes. While the assessment of the just price, which incidentally varied between camps, was impossible of explanation, this price was nevertheless pretty closely known. It can best be defined as the price usually fetched by an article in good times when cigarettes were plentiful. The "just price" changed slowly; it was unaffected by short-term variations in supply, and while opinion might be resigned to departures from the "just price," a strong feeling of resentment persisted. A more satisfactory definition of the "just price" is impossible. Everyone knew what it was, though no one could explain why it should be so.

“As soon as prices began to fall with a cigarette shortage, a clamor arose, particularly against those who held reserves and who bought at reduced prices. Sellers at cut prices were criticized and their activities referred to as the black market. In every period of dearth the explosive question of "should non-smokers receive a cigarette ration?" was discussed to profitless length. Unfortunately, it was the non-smoker, or the light smoker with his reserves, along with the hated middleman, who weathered the storm most easily.”

We are incessantly being told that the cost of medical care is "too high"-- either absolutely or as a growing percentage of our incomes.
But nothing that is being proposed by the government is likely to lower those costs, and much that is being proposed is almost certain to increase the costs.

2940. Rethinking the USA: Breaking up the college cartel

American parents saving for their children's college education will have blood shooting out of their eyes, to steal a phrase from Glenn Beck, by the time they finish reading the discussion from the October 31 airing of Paul Gigot's "Journal Editorial Report" on Fox News Cable. The panel, led by Paul Gigot, examines the reasons for the skyrocketing cost of a college education in the USA.

At the end of this post is the portion of the transcript for the broadcast that deals with the topic. But in brief, the discussion brought out that colleges have learned they can charge whatever the traffic will bear for tuition, even during a deep recession, because they know the government will keep increasing financial aid for low income students. As long as the aid spigot is turned on for the poor, the colleges can get away with gouging middle income families because those are the ones that traditionally put up and shut up.

This means middle income parents who're trying to get their children through four years of college are beaten up twice: first, by an industry that functions much like a cartel by raising their varying tuition prices in concert, then by taxation going toward college aid for which the middle class doesn't qualify.

The upshot is that the college cartel bleeds middle income parents dry, keeps their children in debt for years after graduation, and inexorably drives the USA toward fully socialized higher education.
